POULTRY RANCHES—
For Sale

SEEMS SO FOOLISH FOR NEWCOMERS to Calif. to go miles away from their market in order to buy this SO-CALLED cheap land. In many cases it is not adapted to chickens at all. It is so easy to raise chickens here; you need no expert to show you how. Half-million happy chickens in this valley. RETAIL trade will increase your profits at least $1.00 per bird per year. We have no sandstorms here. Our office is 7½ miles L. A. City Hall. Come out and buy where life is worth while. A ranch near here with AN INCOME costs no more than a well located, high-class city home with NO INCOME.

GET STARTED NOW—EGGS ARE HIGH. YOU can keep 2000 chickens on 1 acre, raise their greens, all your fruit and vegetables and have room for all your buildings. We formerly had 4000 chickens on 2 acres and know what we are talking about when we say this.
DO NOT BE FOOLED when they tell you that on 5 acres you can raise enough grain for 1000 chickens, because it takes 75 acres. The most successful ranches are the ½-acre and acre ones, where they buy FOR LOCATION and forget about a lot of this so-called cheap land miles away from one million consumers. Buy where you have retail trade at your door. Join the co-operative feed assn. and save money on feed.
You can have a ranch here and your wife can start a paying flock while you work in L. A., like many others are doing. NO PIONEERING.
900 pullets, 1½ acres, 4-rm. home, good soil. Own well and pump. Retail location. As close in as Hollywood. 3500 LAYING CAPACITY. 1500 BROODER. 1500 INCUBATOR. A chance to step into a paying business. Only $7500, terms.
400 CHICKENS, 150 rabbits. Cosy new home. Acre good land, plenty water. Many kinds of fruit, berries, etc. Chicken and rabbit equipment. Near stores, bank, transportation. Double gar. Only $5500.
2200 PEDIGREED LAYERS, 5 ACRES. LARGE WALNUTS, 6-rm. modern home, fireplace, chicken equipment for 3000. Own well & pumping plant, fine chicken soil. Owner's books show $2 per bird net for past year. This certainly is the chance of a lifetime to get a paying business and cure your indigestion at the same time.
ALMOST AN ACRE covered with large bearing walnut trees. Own well, 4-rm. cosy home, garage, 2 blks. car, near blvd. and school. Only $3500, easy terms.
KEEP 1000 CHICKENS HERE

AM GOING EAST and will exchange for improved farm or town property Middle West or Eastern State. Will pay commission. I don't need cash.

$46,000—Beautiful ranch near El Centro. 128 acres rich, soft soil. In alfalfa, grapes and mixed crops. Splendid house, barn, tenant house. Tractor, horses, implements, complete vineyard equipment. Leased for ⅓ to responsible tenant. Bank mortgage $16,000, two years.

$32,500—Splendid ranch near Meloland, few miles from El Centro, 155 acres. Leased for lettuce and melons on 1-4 basis, tenant furnishes equipment and labor. Good house. Mortgage $12,500, about 2½ yrs.

$13,500—Near Barstow, 320 acres. About 80 acres been farmed. Small house, shed, two pumping outfits. Mortgage $3500, five years.

I would prefer exchanging my total equity of $60,000 for a good, clear farm or town property; however, I might assume a reasonable mortgage. Would also trade part, but will give extra good deal for clear property that takes all three or two of them. Owner, address F, box 366, TIMES BRANCH.

WORK WITH YOUR MONEY.
To a few capable persons who can invest $500 to $2000, we offer an opportunity to become actively associated with a concern engaged in the distribution of one of the oldest and most extensively advertised products on the market. We have absolutely nothing to sell and you can make $500 to $1000 a month. This is a meritorious proposition and will stand the most rigid investigation. Address Y, box 94, TIMES OFFICE.

GOOD BUSINESS OPENINGS—
A man came into our office this week and told us the following story: "I recommended your firm to a friend of mine some time ago, but he would not come to you with his business because he thought you were too hard boiled, and that you required a statement of the business, and if everything was not just so, you would not handle it." We have about twenty different kinds of business openings on our list, a pretty skinny list for a firm who has been in business nearly fourteen years you will have to admit. The reason is given above. Maybe one of that twenty would appeal to you.

WANTED.
We don't like to be egotistical, but if we don't say something about our method of doing business, and you don't happen to know who or what we are, how are we to act as your agent? If we could cash in on the reputation we believe we have, we could make a lot of money, but if we cannot get the right kind of business openings on the right basis, that reputation we have established in our fourteen years is worth nothing in this respect. We can positively assure you that we have many good clients with funds for investment in manufacturing and other lines where their money and services can be used to good advantage.

RECORD PRESAGED

Reports received from architects, contractors, material firms and building and loan associations point to a tremendous addition to the building permit issue before the end of the year. It is expected that the industry will show a considerable increase compared to that of 1924 when the final figures are in.

Statistics compiled by the Southern California Chapter, Associated General Contractors, bear out the recent statement that dwelling houses erected in Los Angeles during the present year were of higher class than those erected during 1924.

During the first nine months of last year, 14,161 permits with an estimated valuation of $45,010,[...] were issued to build dwelling houses. The average cost per dwelling was approximately $3200, against the average cost per dwelling for the first nine months of 1925 of $3667, or an increase of $467. For the corresponding nine-months period of this year 10,964 permits with a valuation of $40,[...]0,360 have been issued.

HIGH CLASS HOMES

Development of high-class residential districts, especially in the foothills district, has been responsible, to a great extent, for the higher cost per dwelling. During 1924 many small homes were built by small investors and home builders. The small investor had in mind securing a large return on his investment in rents, which were at least 30 per cent higher than at this time, while the home builder had in mind saving rents.

SOUTHLAND CONSTRUCTION PRESAGES RECORD

PERMITS FOR TEN MONTHS HIT SUM OF $214,677,300

Reports From Forty-seven Cities Show Partial October Total Reaching $20,749,829

BY WILL O'BYRNE,
Real Estate and Industrial Editor

Indicative of the prosperity throughout Southern California building permit issues from forty-seven communities reporting a partial total for October to The Times as of the close of business on the 30th inst., gave an aggregate of $20,749,829, compared to $19,345,672 for the same period in 1924. Of the partial total for the month Los Angeles permit valuations amounted to $11,475,178 for the same period, compared to $10,-[illegible]00 for the corresponding period in 1924. The total permit valuation for the forty-six communities in Southern California covering the ten months of the year amounted to $87,434,589, which with the total for Los Angeles for the same period gave a grand total of $214,677,300. The total for Los Angeles for its ten-month period is $127,242,711.

Economists consider the construction industry one of the best barometers of business conditions in the nation. The amount of building under way in the Southland presages excellent times throughout the remainder of the year and well into the next year. Preliminary reports from the office of the building inspector of the city show a number of manufacturing establishments planning additions and numerous new factory buildings. The pay roll is each month growing larger.

RECORD PRESAGED

Reports received from architects, contractors, material firms and building and loan associations point to a tremendous addition to the building permit issue before the end of the year. It is believed that the industry will show a considerable increase compared to the total of 1924 when the final figures are in.

Statistics compiled by the Southern California Chapter, Associated General Contractors, bear out the general statement that dwelling units erected in Los Angeles during the present year were of higher-cost than those erected during 1924.

During the first nine months of the year, 14,161 permits with an estimated valuation of $45,010,-[illegible] were issued to build dwelling units. The average cost per dwelling was approximately $3200, against the average cost per dwelling for the first nine months of 1924 of $3077, or an increase of $123. For the corresponding nine-month period of this year 10,944 permits with a valuation of $40,-[illegible] have been issued.

HIGH CLASS HOMES

Development of high-class residential districts, especially in the Wilshire district, has been responsible, to a great extent, for the increase in cost per dwelling. During 1924 many small homes were built by small investors and home builders. The small investor had in mind securing a large return on his investment in rents, which were at least 30 per cent higher than 1925 rates, while the home builder had in mind saving rents.

Plenty of available funds for building purposes made it possible for the home builder to secure credit, especially if the installment plan of payment was utilized.

FACT AND COMMENT

Home-ownership, stability and good citizenship have almost become synonymous phrases. Rarely is one dissociated from the other two. Agitators are generally found among the floating population, composed of renters. This is the general rule.

The desire to own property is one of the strongest traits in the human character. It ranks along with self-preservation.

To exclaim, "It's mine," when viewing a dwelling brings a glow of satisfaction, to the average man that accounts in a great measure for his stability and good citizenship. He strives to better it.

It means much more than merely saving the rent he might be paying to some landlord. It means a contentment to his wife and children hardly ever found among renters.

The head of the family that each month pays the rent in coin doesn't pay all of the rent. His wife pays a big share in many ways not apparent. The children pay with many heartaches they might be saved were the home owned by the parent.

Is it any wonder that when moved about from place to place during their adolescence they develop an attitude of indifference that startles their parents? Isn't it a part of their environment?

Home-ownership is showing a continuous increase in Los Angeles. During the past nine months almost 11,000 permits were issued to build homes the total valuation of which is $40,205,260. The figures speak well for the future of the city, and its citizens.

Realty Activity

Real-estate market activity throughout the nation registered during September, the last month for which the figures are available at this time, the highest point reached in that month during the past ten years. This is according to the index of activity compiled by the National Association of Real Estate Boards and is based on official figures of the total number of transfers and conveyances recorded in forty-one typical cities.

The market activity during September was 67 per cent greater than the average activity for the same cities during the corresponding month of the years 1916 to 1924, inclusive, which is taken as the basis of the calculations. The

Jonathan Club Building to be Finished Soon

The new limit-height building of the Jonathan Club, on the northwest corner of Sixth and Figueroa streets, is now practically completed, except for inside finishing and installation of furniture and equipment.

The club's seven-story garage is also approaching completion.

A large part of the furniture and other equipment is ready to be placed, and the Jonathans will occupy their new home about December 1, the date stipulated.

Schultze & Weaver, architects for the new Jonathan Club building, have just returned from San Francisco, where they will have architectural supervision of the twenty-seven-story, 400-foot-high building to be erected on Market street for Hunter, Dulin & Co., bond dealers.

MONROVIA GROCER PLANS THREE HOMES

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

MONROVIA, Oct. 31.—A Galbinsky, grocer on South California avenue, took a monopoly on the day's building permits Thursday, securing permits for three new residences on California avenue, to be erected at a cost of $3000 each.

ANNOUNCE BEACH HOSTELRY

Santa Monica Project, Costing $2,000,000, to Materialize with Early Ground-Breaking

By a "Times" Staff Correspondent

SANTA MONICA, Oct. 31.—Towering like a landmark on the ocean front and facing the far flung horizon of the Pacific Santa Monica's proposed $2,000,000 hostelry, the Palisades Hotel, will probably merge into actuality January 1, when first ground is broken, according to an announcement today. The hotel is expected to be completed by Thanksgiving Day, 1926.

Heralded as the last word in appointments the Palisades Hotel will be of Spanish Renaissance design and will stand eight stories high. It was designed by Architect E. J. Baume. The operation of the hotel will be under the supervision of James Woods and Charles Baad, vice-president and general manager, respectively, of the Los Angeles Biltmore Hotel, and under the direct management of John J. Hernan, who was manager for more than eleven years of the Coronado Hotel.

The Palisades Hotel will be located at the corner of Ocean and Marguerita avenues and will contain 300 spacious rooms equipped with the most modern scientific and labor-saving devices. A main patio lounge on the ground floor, 74x130 feet, which will be constantly flooded with sunlight through ornamented skylights, will be one of many distinctive features.

One of the most important items in the hotel's construction will be the inclusion of athletic club features, even to Turkish baths with all the medical and scientific paraphernalia. There will be the salt-water plunge, 20x70 feet, the gymnasium, locker and dressing-rooms and tunnel to the private beach in front of the hotel which will have a 60-foot frontage. Tennis courts will be located adjacent to the hotel on Marguerita avenue, while guests at the hotel will be also accorded the privileges of various country clubs near by, including the Brentwood Country Club.

Definite assurance that the hotel would be built was given the financial interests backing the project when citizens of Santa Monica quickly subscribed to a $350,000 stock campaign conducted last week.

The organization committee which sponsored the drive was headed by T. H. Dudley, local banker, as chairman; W. C. Bull, F. E. Bundy, F. J. Cross, Arthur P. Creel, F. D. Gibbs, H. M. Gorham, Herman Michel, T. M. Perry and Dr. C. P. Thomas. Mr. Woods and Mr. Baad, will be president and vice-president, respectively, of the hotel company, Mr. Hernan, managing director; Everett R. Seaver, local investment broker, secretary and treasurer, and Mr. Dudley, director.

ROOFING CONTRACT LET

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

REDLANDS, Oct. 31.—The Sunset Tile Company here has taken a contract for roofing the Calvary Church in Placentia and four or five houses in Santa Ana.

PERMITS VALUED AT $127,242,711

The Los Angeles building-permit issue for October up to the close of business on the 30th inst. totaled $11,-475,178, with 3847 permits, compared to the same period in 1924 of $10,965,206, with 4256 permits, according to the Southern California Chapter, Associated General Contractors.

This brings the total permit issue for the year in valuation to $127,242,711, compared to $128,243,193 in the corresponding period of 1924.

Indications point to the total for the year topping that of 1924.

BEGIN WORK ON HOTEL IN LONG BEACH

Structure Will Cover Block; to be Completed for Summer Season

The Breakers, a new $2,250,-000 hotel at Long Beach, is now under construction and it is expected to be ready for occupancy by next midsummer.

It will occupy the block at the foot of American avenue bounded by Ocean Boulevard, Locust avenue, Collins Way and Marine Way. This structure is being financed in part by a $1,150,000 bond issue purchased by S. W. Straus & Co.

Rising thirteen stories high, with a central tower eighty feet above the main body of the building, and with arcade and basement floors below the Ocean Boulevard level, the building will contain 330 guest rooms, fourteen stories and a garage for fifty cars. Hot and cold sea water for each bath, radio connection for each room, broadcasting station in the tower and roof garden with open air dancing floor and pergola roof are unique features of the building. It is to be thoroughly furnished and equipped with most modern conveniences to combine the advantages of both a commercial and a tourist hotel.

The central tower structure and west wing, extending to Locust avenue, is to be erected at this time, while the east wing, extending to Collins Way, will be but one story high, but the plans provide for adding twelve more stories comparable to the west wing at a later date.

The new hotel is to be the property of the Breakers Hotel Company of which the principal stockholder is Fred B. Dunn, capitalist and banker of Long Beach. Every effort is being made to complete the structure and have it ready for occupancy by midsummer.

PASADENA MASONS TO BUILD LODGE

Construction Will Begin Soon on Temple Costing About $100,000

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE]

PASADENA, Oct. 31.—Construction of an imposing new Masonic Temple at South Euclid avenue and Grant street will be started in about two weeks. According to the plans completed by Leon C. Brockway, architect, the structure will cost approximately $100,000.

The temple will be occupied by Pasadena Lodge, No. 272, Free and Accepted Masons, and by as many other Masonic orders of the city as can be accommodated. The building will be modern in every mechanical particular, and will include in addition to large rooms, banquet rooms, kitchen, lounge, ladies' rooms, lobby and a large library.

In design, the structure will be classical, with a Corinthian entrance, facing on Euclid avenue, and is expected to be completed by early next summer. W. F. Creller is chairman of the building committee and Henry Ramel chairman of the finance committee of the lodge.

Ontario Hotel Purchased by Eastern Woman

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

ONTARIO, Oct. 31.—With many realty men reporting strong indications for a return of old-time realty activity in Ontario, a transaction was reported today whereby Miss Hulda Schumaker, recently here from New York, purchases the Los Palmas Hotel, 148 West C street, from W. A. Harris, San Bernardino banker, for a reported consideration of $26,000 cash, is of more than ordinary interest.

The Los Palmas is an attractive family hotel of twenty-five sleeping apartments and is set in attractive grounds.

Lankershim showed a greater gain in telephone installations since January 1, than any community in the entire west. The company's statement of station development just issued, covering more than 350 of the leading central offices of the Pacific Coast States, gives Lankershim credit for an increase of 76.83 per cent, as compared with 3.30 for Portland and .83 for Spokane.

The growth of Lankershim as shown by the telephone company's report, is also borne out by the large amount of homebuilding as well as the number of homesites and business locations that have been purchased during the past few months, it was pointed out by owners of the Lankershim High School tract.

With definite assurance from the Board of Education that the Lankershim High School will be ready for the 1926 fall school term, owners of the tract report widespread inquiry relative to business locations close to the new school.

Already many homes are being built in the tract, and it is expected that several business blocks will be under way in preparation for the opening of the high school.

September index is sixteen points higher than the August index and twenty-one points higher than the 1924 index for September. Not so bad. California received its share of the business. Collector of Internal Revenue Goodcell estimates that it leads all States in the amount of income derived from profits on realty sales.

Better Salesmanship

Authorities on salesmanship agree to a man that the first big problem is to win the confidence of the client. Knocking another State or another firm makes the problem all the harder. Clients are likely to "view with suspicion" the salesman that can see no good in the other man's proposition or in the other State.

ARCHITECTS TELL OF WORK

Allied Association Bulletin is Off Press

Deals With Many Projects Under Way

Numerous Articles Pertain to Style

Excellent progress on all of the buildings designed by the Allied Architects' Association, and now being erected under the supervision of the association, is reported in the October issue of the Bulletin, just off the press. Construction work on the first unit of the Los Angeles Museum of Science, History and Art is rapidly nearing completion, according to the report of the production department. Lighting tests are now being conducted in the various rooms, and these tests are being made with the finish in place, so that the best lighting will be obtained. A portion of the new unit will be devoted to the Pan-American exhibition, which will open at the museum next month.

Decoration of the six court rooms designed by the association in the New Hall of Justice is progressing satisfactorily, as is also the completion of the stonework on the exterior of the structure, and the decoration of the lobbies. At Patriotic Hall, on South Figueroa street, the plastering has been nearly completed, and within a few days the installation of the finish millwork will be under way. Sketches for the decoration of the various rooms are being prepared, and the lighting fixtures are being made.

Detail plans, elevations and perspectives for the new $5,000,000 addition to the Los Angeles General Hospital have been completed as a basis for the actual tracings, and each department has been carefully studied with the assistance of the various staff doctors in charge of these departments.

Construction work on the new Echo Park Clubhouse is well along. The exterior walls for the upper floor are now being laid, and the work of the production department on this building has been completed. Further study on the Griffith Park playground project has been delayed on account of contemplated changes in the requirements, sizes and types of swimming pools to be built under the supervision of the playground commission. The association is also assisting in the design of a suitable safety zone for use on the streets of Los Angeles, to be built by the Board of Public Utilities.

The major portion of the new Bulletin is devoted to a discussion of the various styles of architecture. Articles are contributed by David J. Witmer, secretary of the Southern California Chapter of the American Institute of Architects; W. Templeton Johnson, of San Diego; and Joseph L. Brady.

Clear New Site for Huntington Park Industry

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE]

HUNTINGTON PARK, Oct. 31. With the clearing of a large tract of land at the western edge of the city, Huntington Park will have another industrial district adjoining it. The work of felling the large grove of eucalyptus trees and the razing of the Agricultural Company's plant buildings in that section have been completed, and within a short time all stumps will have been burned and logs hauled from the tract. Work of setting stakes on the twenty-five-acre tract has begun. It is the intention to locate manufacturing industries in this new section. The land is owned by the Santa Monica Water and Land Company.

There is already a spur track belonging to the Pacific Electric Railway Company extending into the tract, this having been used by the Agricultural Company before the company's buildings were razed.

NEW BAKERY STRUCTURE

Henry F. Starbuck has prepared plans for a two-story brick bakery building at 640 East Thirty-seventh street for the Murray Banking Company. The structure will cost about $20,000 and will be of brick exterior construction.

PERMITS FOR TEN MONTHS

realized the importance of high-class development, and anticipated the market for dwellings costing in excess of $15,000. Plans were formulated accordingly, and during the present year this class of construction has been the greatest in history.

School buildings erected this year also show a higher average cost than 1924. The first nine months of last year permits for ninety-nine schools with a valuation of $3,309,520 were issued, against 159 with a valuation of $5,227,820 for the corresponding period of this year.

Theater construction has also shown a marked increase in both number of building and valuation. The first nine months last year recorded seven permits valued at $674,725, against eighteen permits with a valuation of $3,381,100 for the corresponding period of this year.

LONG BEACH AHEAD

LONG BEACH, Oct. 31.—Building permits issued in this city for the first twenty-eight days of this month totaled $1,105,109, it was estimated, compared to a total of $936,275 issued during the same period of October, 1924. The total for the year to date here is $15,970,305.

SAN DIEGO GAINS

SAN DIEGO, Oct. 31.—Showing an increase over October of last year of about $90,000 San Diego's building permits for this month up to today showed a valuation of $1,090,766 for 689 permits. During October, 1924, 665 permits were issued with a valuation of $1,001,127.

To date this year 6864 permits have been issued with a valuation of $13,855,509, as compared with the same period last year when 6343 permits were issued valued at $11,303,769.

ONTARIO SETS RECORD

ONTARIO, Oct. 31.—All former monthly building records in the history of Ontario were shattered this month when permits issued showed a total of $193,975 at the close of business Thursday evening, as compared to a total of $63,635 for the corresponding month of the last year.

The total for the year to date now stands at $750,550 as compared to $694,419 to November 1, 1924.

Included in the permits issued during the present month are those for thirty-five new dwellings. The major permit of the month was that to Dr. Calvert L. Emmons for the erection of a three-story theater and office building at Euclid avenue and C street at a cost of $85,000.

UPLAND INCREASES

UPLAND, Oct. 31.—October building permits to date totaled $3000, as compared to $18,350 for the corresponding month of last year. The total for the year to date is $299,150 as against $164,795 last year to date.

BAKERSFIELD PROSPERS

BAKERSFIELD, Oct. 31.—The $2,000,000 mark in building operations in Bakersfield for 1925 was passed this month, figures showing the permits issued to date to be in excess of $2,156,400. Signs of unmistakable prosperity are brought to light when this figure is compared to the building statistics of 1924 when but $1,097,252 worth of permits were granted up to the end of the year.

Valued at $187,886 were the building permits issued during October, this year.

SAN BERNARDINO

SAN BERNARDINO, Oct. 31.—Building permits for October totaled $186,000, bringing the total for the year to $2,227,308, as compared to $2,615,061 for last year at a corresponding date. The permits for October of 1924 were $171,980.

VENTURA HIGHER

VENTURA, Oct. 31.—Total building permits this month to date, $131,035. Total same month last year, $83,404. Total this year to date, $1,624,043.

POMONA JUMPS

POMONA, Oct. 31.—Building report for Pomona is as follows: October, 1925, sixty-two permits at a total of $115,466. October, 1924, fifty-two permits for a total of $74,725. Total for 1925 to date, 505 permits for a total of $940,559. Largest item of construction for October, 1925, is a $25,000 addition to the Masonic Temple here, which will double the floor space of the lodge building and calls for renovation of the entire structure.

FRESNO TONE GOOD

FRESNO, Oct. 31.—Building permits issued here for October aggregate $89,071, bringing the total for the year to date, to $2,804,577, or almost 100 per cent above the total for the ten months' period of 1924. For the year of 1924, to November 1, the total was $1,478,382.

HUNTINGTON PARK FIRM

HUNTINGTON PARK, Oct. 31. With the last day of October, the building permit valuations of Huntington Park are around $80,000, estimated, for the tenth month of the year, bringing the valuations this year above the $1,000,000 mark. The number of permits in October this year will compare favorably with October a year ago.

TULARE COUNTY STRONG

PORTERVILLE, Oct. 31.—The city of Tulare led building in Tulare county for the month of October, 1925, reporting fifteen permits, totaling $18,480, a gain of over October of 1924, when sixteen permits totaled $13,105. Total for 1925 to date is $236,450.

Porterville was next with three permits, totaling $10,000, a gain doubling three permits reported last October, which amounted to $5000. This gain is also reflected in total to date this year of $80,000 as against $50,000 this time last year.

Visalia's permits for October of 1925 totaled $6116.

Exeter had one permit this last month for a modern home totaling $5000, more than double the amount reported for one permit last October of $1500. Exeter's total for the year is $60,271, almost double the amount this time last year, which totaled $37,840.

Lindsay's October report of this year for six permits, totaled $1455.

PASADENA REPORTS

PASADENA, Oct. 31.—Building permits issued here this month reached an estimated total of $695,381, which is to be compared with the October, 1924, total of $1,651,667. The total value of the permits issued here for the year to date is $8,142,562.

Large Gypsum Shipment is Received Here

From San Marcos Island, a huge island of gypsum in the Gulf of Lower California, the former Shipping Board freighter Pallas arrived in Los Angeles Harbor last week with 7000 tons of gypsum aboard. The gypsum shipment, one of the largest ever made by water, will be manufactured into various commodities, chiefly gypsum-centered plaster inth and hollow gypsum building tile.

There are three factories in Los Angeles producing gypsum products.

Formerly, the raw material was obtained from Nevada mines, being shipped here in trainload lots. Obtaining of a concession on San Marcos Island will permit water shipments of gypsum to the three Los Angeles companies, which report an increasing demand for gypsum products.

TWO STORES PLANNED

A contract has been awarded to M. Mann for two one-story brick store buildings at 3627-29 and 4126-30 West Jefferson street. They will cost $14,500.

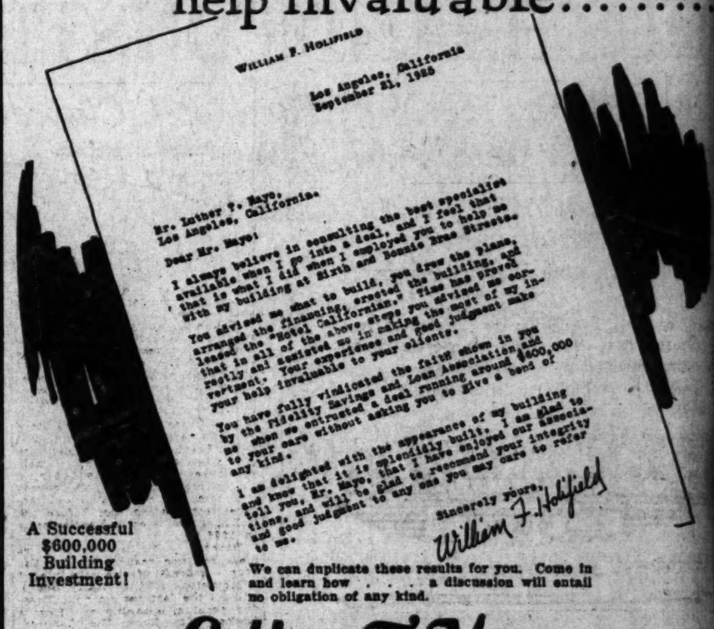
"Your experience and good judgement make your help invaluable....."



WILLIAM F. HOLLFIELD
Los Angeles, California
September 21, 1925

Mr. Luther T. Mayo,
Los Angeles, California.

Dear Mr. Mayo:

I always believe in consulting the best specialist available when I go into a deal, and I feel that that is what I did when I employed you to help me with my building at 81th and Bonnie Brae Streets.

You advised me what to build, you drew the plans, arranged the financing, erected the building, and leased the "Hotel California" when above steps you advised me in renting the most of my apartment. Your experience and good judgment make your help invaluable to your clients.

You have fully vindicated the faith shown in you by the Fidelity Savings and Loan Association and me when we entrusted a deal running around $600,000 to your care without asking you to give a bond of any kind.

I am delighted with the appearance of my building and hope that it is splendidly built. I am glad to tell you, Mr. Mayo, that I have enjoyed our associations, and will be glad to recommend your integrity and good judgment to any one you may care to refer to me.

Sincerely yours,
William F. Hollfield

PROTECTION OF BUYERS URGED

Realty Class Addressed by Local Builder

Safeguard Newcomers Plea of Speaker

Declares Attitude Would Quicken Mart

"There is one vital way in which you as brokers can accelerate the real estate market in Los Angeles," said George E. Schneider, vice-president of the Commercial Construction Company, in speaking before the class in real estate education of the Los Angeles Realty Board on Tuesday evening, "and that is by protecting at every turn the interests of those newcomers to the city who are investing in property here, through your agency.

"Make an analysis of the property you are selling them, see to it that the investments they make are sound and safe, and you will have done much toward quickening the present market, and safeguarding the future of realty values in Los Angeles."

The lecture by Mr. Schneider was the second in the course being presented to broker members of the Los Angeles board and their employees, and was attended by a class of more than 150. The course will comprise a series of ten lectures, terminating just before the holidays, and a second series early in 1926.

Richard C. Willis, who, in large measure, was responsible for the recent redraft of the schedule of commissions of the Realty Board, will be the lecturer on next Tuesday evening, speaking on "How a Broker May Earn His Commission."

WIDE MART INDICATED FOR REALTY

Industrial Future of City Presaged by Recent Sales Dealer Declares

There is no more convincing evidence of the future of Los Angeles as an industrial center than the number of sales recently reported in this section, not only to manufacturers and jobbers, but shrewd investors as well, who have absolute confidence in the stability of values in our industrial section, officials of the Charles G. Andrews realty firm said yesterday.

The company reports the sale of property having a frontage of eighty feet on San Pedro street and eighty feet on San Julian street, with a depth of 286 feet, just north of Eighth street, for a consideration of $135,000—to Howard J. Schoder, a local capitalist. This property was formerly owned by James G. Early, who purchased it from J. A. Jevne about a year ago. Thomas S. Baker of the Andrews company represented both parties in the transaction.

The company also reports the sale of property at 819 East Sixty-second street, in the Goodyear tract, to John E. Coffin, vice-president of the California Furniture Company, for $35,000. This property comprises 21,000 square feet, and is improved with a Class-A industrial building now occupied by the NuGrape Bottling Company.

Also the sale of a twenty-acre industrial site located at One Hundred and Twelfth street and South Park avenue, for $125,000. This property was purchased by a large eastern manufacturer, and will shortly be improved.

Both of these sales were consummated by Mr. Milligan of the industrial department of the company.

China Concern Compelled to Boost Output

Demand for the translucent china ware produced by the Mission China Company has been so great since the beginning of operations last March that an extensive improvement of facilities at the plant has just been launched, according to R. D. Sangster, manager of the industrial department of the Chamber of Commerce. Three new kilns are now being added and the concern's two-story building is being extended to cover the adjoining two lots.

"Growth of the Mission China Company is another testimonial to the high quality of Los Angeles-made products," Mr. Sangster declared. "Although Southern California possesses high grade china clay, the deposits have not been extensively developed and local manufacturers are depending largely on English china clay."

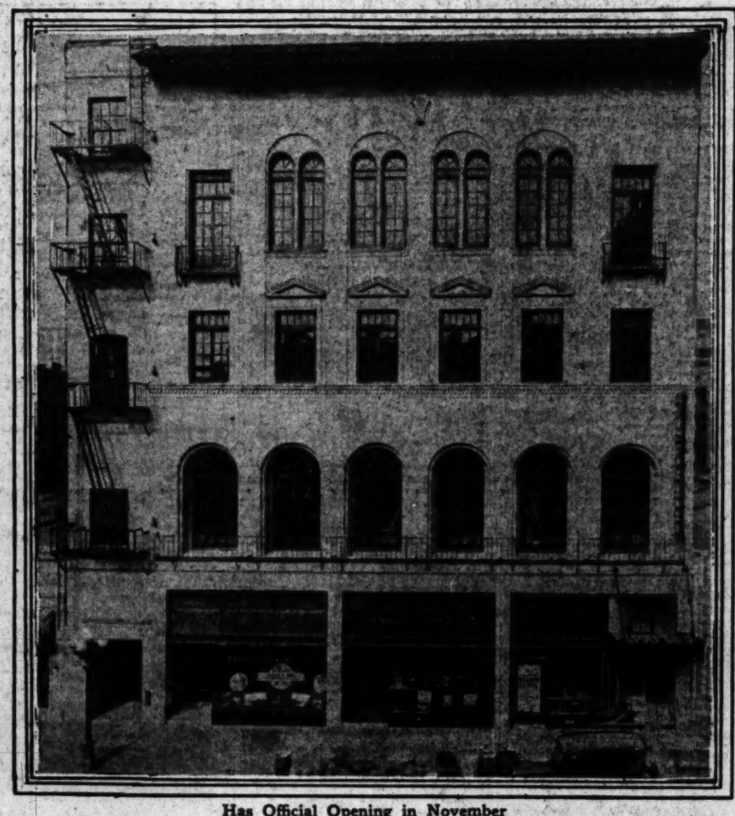
Los Angeles Masonic Club Building



Has Official Opening in November

This structure will be turned over to its owners, the Los Angeles Masonic Club, early in November and an official dedication will be celebrated Monday, November 16. The building is located on South Grand avenue, between Sixth and Seventh streets. The Masonic Club was established three years ago, organized for the most part by Irving J. Mitchell, its president, who has been largely instrumental in securing the new building above.

MASONIC CLUB TO OPEN

New Grand Avenue Home to Provide Center for Resident and Visiting Members

Realizing the ambitions of a few prominent Masons, the new Masonic Club building, located on Grand avenue between Sixth and Seventh streets, will be taken possession of early in November, adding a monument to Masonry in this metropolis.

Established three years ago, the Masonic Club of Los Angeles was brought into existence with the highest ideals in mind—to make the brotherhood a more tangible reality of service to the fraternity and a bulwark in the community.

Since its inception, one of the fundamental purposes of the club was to provide a great Masonic center, similar to those found throughout the East where the Masons of the Southland and visitors from all parts of the world might fraternize throughout the coming years. This has been accomplished by the erection of this new building which is a credit to Los Angeles.

This club will afford all the advantages that any well-appointed club can furnish to members and their families at a very moderate cost.

Centrally located, the building consists of four stories constructed of reinforced steel concrete throughout.

The ground floor is occupied by stores, while the second floor will house a cafe.

The Masonic Club will occupy the entire third and fourth floors, together with a mezzanine, access to the club quarters being by private elevator in the club entrance.

On the third floor will be located the business offices, foyer, an immense lounge, pool and billiard room, game room, library and check rooms.

The fourth floor comprises ladies' reception room, main dining room, private banquet rooms, ladies' dining room and serving room.

The official opening of the club will be celebrated Monday, November 16, with suitable ceremonies and open house to the Masonic fraternity with a variety of entertainment will be held throughout that week.

The club will continue its regular entertainment features at the Wednesday and Friday noon luncheons each week, by securing speakers on live current topics from among those prominent in Masonry and musical programs by noted talent including the club's own orchestra.

With the greatly increased facilities the club can adequately care for a greater number of the fraternity and a membership campaign has been inaugurated. A committee of fifty has been appointed under the general chairmanship of Reynold E. Blight to secure additional members prior to December 1, next, when the admission fee is to be doubled, although the present nominal monthly dues will not be increased.

Irving J. Mitchell, president of the club was practically the founder and is largely responsible for the splendid upbuilding program of the club. The other executive officers are J. Linn Van Norman, vice-president; Reynold E. Blight, treasurer, and C. W. Stowe, secretary.

WILL BUILD BAKERY

Plans have been prepared and work will be started soon by the William P. Nell Engineering & Construction Company on a one-story, two-story and part three-story frame and stucco bakery at 6207 South Manhattan Place for Allan McGavin. The structure will contain five bake ovens, offices, loading platform and will be erected at a cost of about $58,000.

Business Man From East is Building Here

Another prominent easterner has decided to make Southern California his permanent home. G. H. Mead of New York and Chicago, president of the Carbon and Carborundum Company of New York, is now building a residence in Beverly Hills, designed by J. A. Monroe.

In designing this home, particular attention has been given to the electric installation. A. L. Dickie, the builder, claims that it will be one of the most complete electrically equipped homes in the State. This equipment will provide adequate facilities for the use of practically every modern electric appliance.

In addition to the Mead residence, Dickie has completed six other large homes within the past year, and has had them all wired by Barker & Allen.

GET READY!

For Increased Activity in Los Angeles Real Estate

General indications point to a decided Up Swing in the Real Estate market in almost every progressive city. It is the opinion of those who have made careful analysis of conditions that there are more and better reasons for enhancement in Realty Values in Los Angeles than any other city in the nation.

Wilshire Blvd. Corner, $550 Per Ft.

Large corner on Wilshire Blvd. and very important cross street running to Hollywood on the North and Pico on the South. This corner we feel is next in importance on the boulevard to Wilshire and Western, and is offered at one-sixth to one-fourth the price of such corners. This should sell for $1000 per ft. within next two years. See MR. LINT.

Western Ave. Corner, $650 Per Ft.

Can deliver 166-ft. corner now ripe for business improvements. No other corner within seven blocks on either side of this corner can be had for less than $1000 to $1500 per foot. See MR. O'HARA.

Furnished Apt. House, $46,000; Inc. $7800 Year

42-Room new apartment completely furnished near Vermont and Melrose on 66x155-ft. lot. Modern, new furniture and in a fine rental district. This shows unusual and bona fide income. $20,000 will handle. See MR. HUGGINS.

Business Block 100x140 to Alley

Income $11,200, increasing yearly. Entire building leased to two concerns. This is the choicest property we have had to offer for months. Large improvements costing $250,000 to be erected in same block. This is open for immediate action only. We recommend this for a conservative investment. See MR. HUGGINS.

Hancock Park Residence Lots

We have several real pickups on very choice lots in this fine tract owned by non-residents who desire to sell and offering way below value. Call MR. FLANNAGAN or MR. STAIR.

A Real Steal $22,500. 60x130

Adjoining $1800 ft. corner. This at $375 per foot is more than a sacrifice. On Western Ave. next to the most important East-and-West artery. See MR. GRANT.

Wilshire District Residences

We have a large listing of the choicest homes in this section from $9000 to $200,000. If you desire to buy or rent a home, see us for real values.

OPPORTUNITY IS HERE

LOS ANGELES IS FACING THE GREATEST ERA IN ITS DEVELOPMENT. Big Profits are sure to be made by investing in well-located Business Property NOW. Great Real Estate Activity Is Already Under Way.

"Let's Talk It Over!"

99 YEAR LEASEHOLD

Large corner on prominent Hollywood thoroughfare. About ¾ of an acre. Present income carries the property including ground rent. This is a straight lease with no increase in rentals, building clause complied with, and will be a big money-maker for someone. Small amount of cash will handle. Might consider part trade.

WESTERN AVENUE BRICK STORES. $6,000 CASH WILL HANDLE

Opposite Bank and Motion Picture Theater. Average yearly income $12552. A conservative investment with good future. Price $32,000.

2-STORY BRICK STORE AND OFFICE BUILDING

Average income over $10,000 a year. Fully leased. This is a transfer corner with both bus line and car line transportation and surrounded by very thickly populated high-class residential district. New developments are now taking place which will greatly enhance the value of this property. It has just been placed on the market and for a man who has $30,000 to $75,000 to invest in a proven business building it would be hard to find, price considered, a property to compare with this. No obligation to give interested parties complete details upon request. Price $185,000.

WESTERN AVENUE, NORTH OF BEVERLY

116-ft. corner, ripe for immediate improvement, or on the terms and conditions under which this property can be delivered, offers one of the most unusual speculative opportunities we have had for some time. Might consider some trade. Nominal cash will handle.

BARGAIN HOLLYWOOD BUSINESS LOT

47x178 ft. Directly across the street from million-dollar improvements being started immediately. Property improved, this property will rent at a low estimate the first year at approximately $10,000. Nominal improvements now on property bring in approximately $1800 a year. $15,000 cash will handle. This is sure fire.

Title Company Official Says—

That we are fast approaching a selling market—and in fact, believes that it will come not later than this present winter season.

We have been studying conditions affecting Southern California and everything is in favor of an active season of good business.

In Southern California in particular, good business conditions always follow an active REAL ESTATE market—therefore, those that have "eyes to see and ears to hear" WILL BUY NOW.

And soon after—as is always the case—the mob wakes up to the fact that there is activity and begins to buy, and at this point those that were able to discern the signs of the times unload and collect their profits.

Will appreciate an opportunity to serve you.

"Own Your Own Home" Essay Contest Popular

Many Uniformly Good Papers Are Submitted

Huntington Park Resident Gets First Place

The judges of the "Own Your Own Home" essay contest conducted by the Southwest Realty Board, have submitted the names of the contest winners. A. M. Bright, chairman of the committee, announced the names at the meeting of the board last Monday evening, declaring that the delay in selecting the winners was due to the large number of essays submitted, and the difficulty in selecting the best from the large number of uniformly good papers. The winners were selected as follows:

First prize, William H. Spaulding, 133 North Middleton street, Huntington Park; second, Herb Lewis, 716 West Sixty-first street; third, Mrs. Arthur E. Briggs, 2372 West Twenty-first street.

The above three will receive prizes of $25, $15 and $10, respectively. Fourth and fifth places have been awarded as follows, although there are no accompanying prizes: Fourth, Bertha L. Wade, 1201 West Ninety-eighth street; fifth, Mrs. E. E. Cowman, 1009 South Gramercy Drive.

The essays were judged, as previously announced, on material, composition and neatness. They were also selected, to some degree, upon their "sales strength," or the desire they would create in the reader to own his own home.

REDLANDS REALTY ACTIVITY ON UP-TREND

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

REDLANDS, Oct. 31. — There has been quite a sale of homes during the week. Mae E. Hoss has sold two houses on Ninth street to J. E. Dabidson and E. E. Cole. Prof. E. B. Van Osdel has purchased a new house on East Colton.

The Anderson Lumber Company property at State and Seventh has been sold to C. A. Butler of Venice for $10,000. The People's Realty Company sold a ten-acre grove on Orange avenue to Austin Park for the owner O. J. Fisk. This property was valued at $18,000.

LARGE DEAL CLOSED IN HUNTINGTON PARK

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE]

HUNTINGTON PARK, Oct. 31. One of the largest realty deals that has been closed recently in this section was one in which Miss Ted Volner, of Flower street, purchased the property at 191 and 193 West Slauson avenue, just west of North Pacific Boulevard. The amount involved was $18,000.

The dimensions of the lot are 50x130 feet, and it is located on a heavily traveled thoroughfare.

ESSAY WRITER WINS PRIZE

Cites Many Reasons in Support of Ownership of Home by Head of Family

BY WILLIAM H. SPAULDING

(The following essay was awarded first price in the "Why Own Your Own Home" contest conducted recently by the Los Angeles Realty Board, Southwest Branch. It has a quality known to the writing fraternity as human interest and will be found interesting to many of the subscribers of The Times.—Ed.)

The last rent bill paid by my family was that for the month of June, 1918. Since the family consists of only my wife and 3-year-old girl, it might be wondered at how they could contribute toward the outlay mentioned. Nevertheless, I meant just what I said, for when a family lives in a rented house or apartment the whole group therein dips down into its existence and delivers up some jewel which it would like to have retained.

The mother, the wife, misses that glory that goes with being able to arrange after her own mind, that domicile wherein she passes so much of her life. The husband moves about the city and meets many people, or even if he works in a shop his day has more or less of diversion in it. But the woman stays to a greater or less extent within the four walls of her house, and it seems an imposition that she should be estopped by the bar of non-ownership from doing whatever she might to arrange that interior to suit the dictates of her own desires. A new electric fixture here or new tiling there are hers when and where she wants them if the house is hers.

CHILD GETS BRUNT

Now for the husband. What a glory there is in the possession of even a few square yards of ground with which he can do as he pleases. Arthur Young in his book, "Travels in France," in commenting on the astonishing results obtained by peasant landowners, says: "Give a man the secure possession of a bleak rock, and he will turn it into a garden; give him a nine-year lease of a garden, and he will convert it into a desert."

The chief sufferer, however, when the permanency of the home has not been established, is the child of the family. She, above all, is being deprived of part of her birthright. No use to plant a tree on a birthday in the thought of some day enjoying the shade; no use marking her height on the garage door. Yor next year she won't be here to compare it; no use getting much acquainted around the neighborhood, for the family will be moving again soon; no use planting chrysanthemums for they don't bloom until fall; no use having a pet cat because she would always go back to the old place.

How many little girls have thrown themselves down on the floor and cried when first they learned that they were soon to move away from the friends that they have known for a whole year, and from the familiar school circle! I say girls, because a boy can expend his anger in tearing down his aerial and pulling up his ground wire.

ENDS UNCERTAINTY

What must be the reaction on the youthful mind after a few "moves?" Could you blame a child if such a system should impress him with a sense of instability, and generate in him a feeling that there is no use doing a thing particularly well for fear that somebody else would reap what he had so carefully sown?

That day back in 1918 when my family, consisting of my wife and 5-months-old girl, moved into the house which has been our home until today, I said: "I hope she starts to school from this house, and goes to her graduation exercises from this door."

In rearing our little girl we have always sought to make her contented with her home. I built her an electrically lighted playhouse large enough to give a dinner to her cronies. That playhouse cost less than $4 because I made it out piano boxes. She has a concrete wading pool that cost about $5, the labor having been thrown in. She has a swing, a tent, a hammock, fruit trees to climb in, a lawn to turn summersaults on, and enough flowers to supply her teacher the year around. For pets she has twenty chickens and 17,000,000 ants.

In her short life she has seen in our neighborhood houses built and burned and moved away. She has seen many, many families move in, move out, and move on in a tragic shuffle of uncertainty. We alone seem to stay.

Our house is a modest frame bungalow, but to her its foundations go down to the center of the earth and its gables are hooked to the sky.

If I were a dealer in real estate I would put at the top of every page of business literature, the words:

Nobody is ever at home in a rented house.

Arcadia Body Outlines New Zoning Scheme

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE]

ARCADIA, Oct. 31.—The City Planning Commission, which has been working out a comprehensive zoning scheme for this city, with the assistance of G. Gordon Whitnall, Los Angeles expert, sidestepped the business-zone fight which was expected Wednesday night at a public mass meeting, to study the proposed zones.

Developed without zone restrictions, Arcadia has five well defined business centers, and innumerable other corners where one or two business establishments can be found. The general business zone was outlined with Orange avenue on the north; Alta avenue on the south; Santa Anita avenue on the west and Second avenue on the east.

This area includes both of the original business centers on First avenue and Huntington Drive at Second avenue. At all other intersections, spotted all over the city map, where business houses are located, the four corners were designated as business zones.

FIVE VIADUCTS TO SPAN ROAD

Planned for Castellammare Subdivision

Structures to Cross Ocean Highway

Will Aid Tract Residents to Reach Beach

One of the noteworthy features to make Castellammare—a Frank Meline Company subdivision—one of the most beautiful and picturesque coast region residential sections in California, will be the construction of five long artistically-built concrete viaducts spanning the ocean highway north of Santa Monica from the Promenade to the beach. These viaducts will cost in excess of $125,000 and will be built of concrete reinforced with steel. They will be faced with the natural stone secured from the Castellammare tracts.

According to William P. Humason, manager of the Castellammare tracts, these viaducts will vary in length from 100 to 175 feet and will contain broad promenades and a new and colorful ornamental lighting system. The viaducts will make it possible for the residents of Castellammare to go to and from the beach front without being compelled to cross traffic along the crowded Coast highway.

Humason said that the contracts to lay sewers and electric conduits have been let and the work is progressing rapidly. The gas and water will be put in immediately after the former improvements have been made. Humason said that when the paving on Beverly Boulevard is completed it will be possible to go from Castellammare to the site of the Southern Branch of the University of California in twenty minutes.

Among the beautiful new homes to be built in Castellammare, he said, will be one by John M. Stahl, the well-known motion-picture producer. Another beautiful home will be built by Victor W. Coules. The construction work on these residences, as well as several others, will be started within the next three weeks.

DEPARTMENT TO ISSUE CONVENTION BULLETIN

The State Real Estate Department is compiling its semiannual directory bulletin to the 18,000 realty brokers. This bulletin will contain a report of the principal papers and addresses delivered before the twenty-first annual convention of the California Real Estate Association. Leading real estate topics are included in the list and the bulletin will be an invaluable index for real-estate offices.

Up to the present time nearly 50,000 licenses have been issued in California to realty brokers and and salesmen.

COMMISSIONER WRITES

Writing of official actions on the part of the State Real Estate Department, Commissioner J. R. Gabbert tells readers of California Real Estate in its forthcoming November issue how the public can be of assistance in enforcing the Real Estate Act.

Bel-Air Country Club Building

Construction Starts Immediately

Work is to start at once on this beautiful clubhouse, which is to grace the Bel-Air subdivision, according to A. E. Tomblin, a sales manager for the Frank Meline Company. The first nine holes of the golf course for the club are to be completed and opened for use by New Year's, Tomblin said.

Home Tract is Comprised of Large Acreage

There are upward of 4000 acres within the boundaries of Bel-Air, a subdivision of the Frank Meline Company, according to A. E. Tomblin, sales manager.

This acreage, together with approximately 20,000 acres running as far west as Topanga Canyon and the ocean beach, is under the ownership and control of the Alphonso E. Bell Corporation, with the property being handled by the Frank Meline Company.

Tomblin adds that more than $300,000.00 has been invested in Bel-Air estates within a period of two years, with the extremely unprecedented rate of 98 per cent of the purchasers intending to build beautiful residences.

Among the estate owners who have built or who intend building homes in the immediate future are W. L. Honnold, prominent mining man; Dr. W. E. T. Smith; James L. Rice, Los Angeles capitalist; Dr. C. J. R. Engstrom; H. P. Reticker, Los Angeles manufacturer; Robert H. Cromwell, and many others.

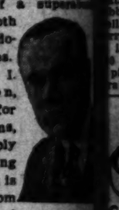
RESERVOIR FARMS HAVE AN IMMEDIATE SUPPLY OF WATER

Hundreds on Road to Independence With Acre or More

There is no water problem at Reservoir Farms and purchasers are assured of a superabundant supply for both irrigation and domestic purposes.



According to I. E. Pendleton, sales manager for Reservoir Farms, water to supply this fast-growing farming project is now pumped from an underground flow into a huge reservoir and complete distribution system. Water is piped to each unit, all without additional cost to the purchaser.

While Reservoir Farms was recently placed on the market by the Commonwealth Home Builders, 727 South Spring Street, hundreds of small farms have already been sold on the company's liberal terms of only $5.00 down and $5.00 per month per acre. The success of early purchasers are making Mr. Pendleton, is a good indication of what any man or woman can accomplish.

Another Huge Reservoir

This property was formerly a huge alfalfa ranch and the reservoir already had been developed to supply of water to more than twice the needs for intensified small farming. In fact, we have so much water that even when the farms are thickly settled we will still be in a position to give a five-day service on irrigation water.

The pipe line construction is getting under way, and the huge reservoir has been excavated for and will soon be completed.

This complete irrigation system is constructed and equipped at the expense of the Commonwealth Home Builders, and is deeded free of incumbrances. With all of the water development, it is the belief of Mr. Pendleton and officials of the company, that they are making it possible for buyers to have independence and independence in exchange for their honest efforts.

It is easy to reach Reservoir Farms, only 48 miles from the downtown Los Angeles, eight miles from beautiful Riverside and close to the cities of Pomona and Ontario.

Reservoir Farms are selling fast. They are today's big opportunity to purchase a small farm where you and your family can enjoy life to the fullest extent.

Think of the independence . . . and profit . . . that await you. Your income at Reservoir Farms is only limited by the amount of effort you put forth.

You can raise poultry, pigeons, rabbits, etc. You can raise fruits, vegetables, berries, etc.—in fact, every branch of intensified farming is an income producer at Reservoir Farms.

The soil at Reservoir Farms is of an alluvial silt and sandy loam, and is adapted to practically anything that can be grown in Southern California. There is no alkali at Reservoir Farms.

A ready market absorbs the products of these farms.

Reservoir Farms have probably broken all land sales records, and as soon as the developments which we are now hurrying through are completed, it will only be a matter of a very short time until we have a thriving community.

The sale of these farms can't go on forever. They are going fast. Select yours without delay. Drive out TODAY —or send the coupon for complete details.

CONSTRUCTION JOBS BEGGING

Santa Barbara District Builders Swamped With Work

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

SANTA BARBARA, Oct. 31.—Activity in the construction industry throughout this district has increased so rapidly that contractors and builders are swamped with work.

When the Board of Supervisors of this county advertised for bids on the construction of jails in the towns of Lompoc, Los Alamos and Guadalupe, no bids whatever were received.

The board is readvertising in an effort to attract outside builders.

NORTHWEST BOARD TOLD OF WILSHIRE

President Tatum of Parent Unit Principal Speaker at Weekly Luncheon

President C. C. C. Tatum of the Los Angeles Realty Board was the guest of honor and principal speaker at the weekly luncheon meeting of the northwest realty men of the Los Angeles Realty Board, held Friday noon at the Apple Blossom Inn on La Brea avenue.

Tatum confined his remarks to his personal observations of the development during the past few years of the district between Western avenue and Beverly Hills along Wilshire Boulevard, the territory in which the northwest realty men operate.

The northwest realty men of the Los Angeles Realty Board were organized early this year to carry on multiple listing operations. The membership is near the fifty mark and the listing service, according to Chairman Ted Sackett has been unusually successful.

VISION CITED BUILDER'S NEED

Community Developer Tells of Requirements

Declares Southland Growth Demands Planning

Insists Forethought Vital to Meet Demands

The most vital quality of the man who builds or develops a project in Southern California is that he possess that intangible but essential quality to foresee development, according to Victor Girard, community builder, when asked his opinion of the most important requirement of a builder.

"Whether that man is constructing an abode for his family, or is laying the foundation for a city, his plans should be far-reaching, his mind should visualize what the requirements of that home or community will be a few years hence.

"In other parts of the country the need for such vision is less acute. The majority of the cities of the nation remain fixed where they were first implanted. Their population stands at a mark which varies little with each census, and the needs of such cities change little compared with our cities here in Southern California.

"Southern California, however, is a land of overnight discoveries, where the wildest dreams are realized. It possesses a climate, soil and other essentials which go to make her growth and development rapid," continued Mr. Girard.

"Southern California is a demonstrated lure for the population of the entire nation, and it has natural endowments which have proven practically unlimited. Once here, the newly arrived inhabitant finds himself confronted with strange surroundings. Grant that this man has that worthy quality, vision, he will at once adapt himself to the situation as he finds it.

"Subdividers, community builders, particularly, find themselves confronted with problems which can only be solved by the most intensive study and foresight. Each new district at its beginning must be studied with a view of determining every potentiality it possesses.

"It must be considered from every angle, ranging from its manufacturing and residential possibilities to the direction the wind blows during different seasons, and the convenience of the housewife in hanging out her laundry.

"Next the vision of the city planner is brought into play as he contemplates what that city will be in one, five, ten or one hundred years hence."

BOULEVARD ON SKYLINE IS PLANNED

Survey of Route Through Hills East of Los Angeles Approved by Supervisors

The first step toward the realization of the Skyline Boulevard, that has been proposed from the east extension of Beverly Boulevard through the hills to Whittier, thence through North Whittier and La Habra Heights to the Los Angeles county line, was taken last week.

The Associated Chambers of Commerce of the San Gabriel Valley, composing representatives from twenty cities, met with the Los Angeles County Board of Supervisors, with the result that the Supervisors agreed to make a survey covering the route of this great scenic drive through the hills east of Los Angeles.

It is thought that the Supervisors of Riverside and San Bernardino counties will co-operate and extend this drive through to the Santa Ana River at Corona.

This drive, when completed, will rival the now-famous Mulholland High Way and the Skyline Boulevard, which runs south from San Francisco. It can be laid out so that it will offer, for almost its entire length, an unobstructed view of the San Gabriel Valley and the San Bernardino Mountains on one hand and the Pacific Ocean on the other. Also it will add another artery for motor travel to the fast-developing eastern sections of the city and county.

EDUCATION IN REALTY IS POPULAR

Boards in Southland Area Form Classes With Large Enrollment

The enthusiastic manner in which the various realty boards throughout the States are receiving the educational course which is being conducted by the University of Southern California and the California Real Estate Association indicates that it is meeting a widely felt need.

Pomona Realty Board has enrolled the largest class this year—registering a total of sixty-three students, while Chico Realty Board is the farthest north and El Centro the farthest south. Classes have been organized in Bakersfield, Beverly Hills, Huntington Park, Inglewood, Monrovia, Montebello, Santa Ana, South Pasadena, Los Angeles, Realty Board, Southwest branch, West Hollywood and Wilmar with a total enrollment of about 500 students. The Pasadena, San Diego, Long Beach and Santa Monica boards are working hard to surpass the record of the Pomona board. Among the other classes in process of organization are San Fernando, Riverside, San Bernardino, Fresno, Stockton and Sacramento.

Harrison Lewis of Beverly Hills, chairman of the educational committee of the California Real Estate Association, says, "It is very gratifying to note the manner in which the realty boards are continuing the educational program this year. It is anticipated that there will be at least 1000 students enrolled in these classes. I believe the time is not far distant when a certificate of completion of the course in real estate of the University of Southern California and the California Real Estate Association will be required of every licensed broker and salesman in this State."

ALHAMBRA THEATER FORMALLY OPENED

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE]

ALHAMBRA, Oct. 31.—Another playhouse was added to the amusement places of Alhambra this week when the Granada Theater on West Main street was formally opened to the public with an elaborate program which included the personal appearance of several motion-picture celebrities.

C. A. Ferry of Pasadena has spent $30,000 in alterations and improvements, making the house one of the most attractive and comfortable in this district. The house will seat 550 persons.

OPEN NEW CAFE AT PORTERVILLE

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

PORTERVILLE, Oct. 31.—Another cafe has opened in Porterville, the M. & L. Coffee Shop, starting business at 211 Main street, near the intersection of Garden street.

C. R. Morrison, formerly of Bakersfield, and Roy Lane, formerly of Kalamath Falls, are proprietors of the new shop.

NEW FACTORIES BEING COMPLETED

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE]

VERNON, Oct. 31.—Work on the new manufacturing structures, two in number, being erected by the Mechanical Pattern Works at 4545 Pacific Boulevard, is nearing completion.

The buildings cost $10,000, it is announced. Both are one-story structures and one will be used for a foundry and the other for a shop.

HAWTHORNE THEATER

Plans are being prepared by the Cowles-Perrine Organization for a two-story and part basement brick theater and office building at Ballona and Hawthorne avenues, Hawthorne, for O. G. Williams. Plans provide for auditorium to seat 1040 people, four stores and eleven offices, and when completed the structure will cost about $80,000.

WILL CONSTRUCT STORE

A contract has been awarded to Robert E. Millsap for a two-story store and office building on Wilshire Boulevard near Western avenue for Dr. John McCoy. Plans for the structure, which is estimated to cost $85,000 and to be of brick walls and stucco exterior construction, were prepared by Morgan, Walls & Clements.

MONROVIA MILLERS TO OPEN NEW PLANT

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

MONROVIA, Oct. 31.—Monday morning Glesby Brothers Grain and Milling Company will open for business in their new $25,000 plant at Olive and Ivy avenues.

The new plant has a frontage of 150 feet on Olive avenue, with a depth of 87 feet on Ivy avenue, and is equipped with every late device for the handling and milling of grain. The storage bins will hold 1080 tons.

BEGIN WORK ON MONROVIA BUILDING

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

MONROVIA, Oct. 31.—A new business building on South Myrtle avenue has been started by Ed Pringle, pioneer property owner here.

It has a frontage of 53 feet with a depth of 60 feet, of all-steel construction, concrete floors, and pressed brick front. It will be occupied by the Monrovia Auto Wreckers and Willard & Smith's foundry plant.

HOME MART IN BEVERLY HILLS GOOD

Dickason Building Firm Completes Twenty-five Fine Residences

Intense home-buying activity in the Beverly Hills section is reported by the Dickason Building Company, which announces the completion of a group of twenty-five houses. The group comprises the second unit of the firm's building program in the Toberman tract, which lies between Preuss Road and Doheny Drive, and extends north from Burton Way to Beverly Boulevard.

Both Spanish and English types of architecture are employed, each house having individual touches of design and arrangement which make it distinctively different from others in the neighborhood. Each has a double garage.

Dickason said: "In building these houses we have succeeded in giving them the interior beauty and utility that one would expect to find in a home costing a great deal more."

He will continue his building program by starting work on another group of twenty-five houses, similar to those just completed, which will be built in the Beverly Vista tract.

PAINT FIRM COMPLETES WAREHOUSE

Is Largest Erected During Year by Concern and Will Provide Ample Storage

Completed last month at a cost in excess of $251,500, the W. P. Fuller & Co. warehouse at Barranca street and San Fernando Road, a five-story structure, stands out as one of the most important developments in that section of the city during the past year.

The building was erected by the North Pacific Construction Company, member of the Southern California Chapter, Associated General Contractors of America.

The building is occupied by the W. P. Fuller & Co. paint and glass concern, as a general warehouse, providing ample storage facilities for the stock that is distributed to its Los Angeles stores and the stores in the near-by towns.

While this building is the largest erected during the past year by the firm, it has been expanding its business constantly, opening branch stores in several of the small towns near Los Angeles.

WILL BUILD STORE

Sam Tomovitch has been awarded a contract for the erection of a one-story brick store building at Moneta. Plans were prepared by A. S. Nibecker, Jr.

TELLS FLORIDA OF LOS ANGELES

Local Realty Firm Invades Southern Mart

Advertises Southland's Big Advantages

Receives Many Letters of Inquiry

Daniel, bearding the lion in his den, had nothing on J. C. Casler and Ed A. Lucas, sales agent and salesmanager, respectively of Vermont-Beverly Trust Estate, when they invaded the heart of Florida's feverish real-estate activity with a full-page newspaper advertisement in a Miami morning paper laying forth the advantage of Los Angeles real estate in general and Vermont-Beverly Trust Estate, in particular, as a logical investment opportunity.

"We have kept in close touch with Florida's temporary real-estate boom, and we have felt that Los Angeles will be the next to feel the result of the nation's increasing prosperity in a big way," said Mr. Casler.

"After analyzing the situation, we believed that the contrast of Los Angeles prices on business property lying only eight minutes from downtown as illustrated in Vermont-Beverly Trust Estate, would appear particularly attractive to an investor when compared with the prices they are asking and getting in Miami, considering what they have of business to stabilize values.

"It is surprising the number of comments and letters we received as a result, from persons who announced their intention of returning to Los Angeles in the near future and who frankly stated their preference for this particular locality as a permanent residence or business location.

"Not only our property, but Los Angeles herself should benefit in some degree as a result of our rather unusual sales measure."

San Gabriel to Get New Stores and Dance Hall

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

SAN GABRIEL, Oct. 31.—A building to cost $30,000 and to comprise a dance hall and stores is being planned by Ernest Hertel, formerly of Chicago. The structure, plans for which have been drawn by Gualano & Zebold, will be located about 400 feet south of Broadway on San Gabriel Boulevard, just outside the city limits of San Gabriel.

Representatives of Hertel appeared before the Board of Trustees of this city at their meeting this week and asked for their sanction to conduct the dance hall. Although the enterprise would be outside the city limits, the county officials asked for the opinion of the local board before granting a permit.

The Trustees voted unanimously to give their approval to the project.

The proposed structure will be erected by N. C. Hove & Son.

Visalia Home Sold in Week's Realty Deals

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

VISALIA, Oct. 31.—Earl Switzer has sold his residence in the Home Builders' tract to Roy Gill, who will take possession on November 1.

Mr. and Mrs. Switzer have taken a lease on the E. B. Waterman residence on Northwest Second avenue and will move there the first of the month. This sale was consumated through the Edwards Realty Company.

Roy Gill is connected with Fred Gill and other cattlemen who have leased the Harrel ranch. The former Switzer home is one of the most attractive residences in the city.

NEW EL CENTRO HOTEL

Plans have been prepared by Don W. Wells, El Centro, for a new hotel building at Brawley to replace the old Dunlack. The structure is estimated to cost $150,000 and will contain seventy-five rooms with 100 per cent baths.

B'NAI B'RITH PLANS READY

Plans have been prepared by Edelman & Barnett and S. Tilden Norton and Frederick H. Wallis, associated for a construction of a synagogue for the congregation of B'nai B'rith at Wilshire and Hobart boulevards. The structure will cost about $1,000,000, and will be of reinforced concrete construction.

BROKER MOVES OFFICES

H. U. Bear, real estate and insurance broker, located in the downtown district for the past twenty-one years, has moved his offices and entire force to 727 South Alvarado street.

To a Wide Awake Merchant:

The N.W. corner of Olive and Pico Streets is available for a long term lease. The ground extends 59 feet on Olive Street by 180 feet to an alley on Pico Street. It is improved with a one-story brick building, concrete basement throughout—partially sprinklered.

This corner would make an ideal location for a wholesale and retail paint and paper business, a hardware establishment, a plumbing fixture firm, or any similar business requiring a central location, (yet not in the congested district) plenty of display space and adequate floor area.

A favorable lease and terms can be negotiated by some substantial and enterprising firm that acts promptly.

NEW CHEVY CHASE AREA IS OPENED

Country Club Estates Are Offered Bordering Fairways of Golf Course

Development in Chevy Chase has now reached the stage where it is possible to offer large country club estates bordering the actual fairways of the new Chevy Chase golf course, according to Bert Farrar, owner and developer of this immense suburban community project now entering the sixth week of a very successful sale.

These new tracts are in most cases at least half an acre in size and are covered with immense oaks and sycamores, it is explained. They front on Sheridan Road, which is to be one of the feature residential avenues of the project, as it will encircle the northern half of the country club grounds.

In addition to these new golf club sites it is now possible to secure a wide variety of homesites at a wide range of prices, asserted P. R. McDermott, director of sales for the owners. Among the types of property now available are large tree-covered lots fronting on the main highway of Chevy Chase Drive, a higher section that commands marvelous views, and a third area devoted to large restricted residential estates from one to ten acres in size.

These latter are in the favored frost-free section of the property, said by experts to be exceptionally favorable for the culture of avocados.

Pasadena Man Sells Upland Buyer Orchard

G. Parker Toms, Pasadena, has sold to J. F. Carlson, Upland, the west twenty acres, with the building and improvements, of his forty-acre citrus grove in the College Heights district, northeast of Claremont.

The east twenty acres of this forty-acre citrus grove, Toms sold to L. Dillon, a Claremont man, who turned in on the purchase price, his modern bungalow court at Claremont, paying the difference in cash.

Both Carlson and Dillon are experienced citrus growers. An exceptionally heavy crop of citrus fruit is on thirty-five acres of the grove.

The total consideration involved in the Toms-Carlson-Dillon deals is more than $100,000. J. A. Fitch of Pomona, represented all parties.

Apartments in New Structure Selling Fast

The Havenhurst Individually Owned Apartment-house, located at Whitley and Franklin avenues in Hollywood, is now 75 per cent sold out, according to M. A. Charlston, fiscal agent.

With this as but one of several demonstrations of the acceptance of "own-your-own" idea in Los Angeles, this new modern plan of living, which has proved so popular in New York and other large eastern cities, as well as San Francisco, will probably continue to increase in popularity locally, Charlston said.

PHOENIX CHURCH

Plans are being prepared for a new church building at Third avenue and Van Buren street, Phoenix, for the Presbyterian Church, by Norman F. Marsh. It will cost about $250,000.

WILMINGTON WAREHOUSE

Plans have been completed and work will be started soon by John M. Cooper on the erection of a three-story reinforced concrete warehouse at Wilmington for Smart & Final.

PLAYHOUSE PLANS NEAR COMPLETION

Legitimate Theater Building to be Started at Hollywood in Thirty Days

A colorful ceremony participated in by stage and screen celebrities, was planned yesterday to mark the start of construction of the Hollywood Playhouse, a legitimate theater in the film city. The plans for the ground-breaking ceremonies were launched as the designers for the $600,000 enterprise, Gogerty & Weyl, announced that the plans were rapidly nearing completion. Ground will be broken within thirty days, it was expected.

At the same time, officers of the Hollywood Playhouse Realty Corporation announced that Douglas L. Skelly & Co., have been named fiscal agents for the concern, with authority from the State Corporation Commissioner to dispose of $250,000 8 per cent cumulative preferred stock. The corporation has a capitalization of $1,000,000.

A crew of men was engaged last week in clearing the site of the old residences which have occupied the property for years. This property is 300 feet north of Hollywood Boulevard on Vine street and adjoins the new postoffice building.

The officers and directors of the Playhouse Corporation include a number of prominent Hollywood financial figures. Gilbert H. Beesemeyer, Harry E. Jones, G. R. Dexter, Orville L. Routt, Frederick G. Leonard, Charles R. Stuart and A. Z. Taft are all directors of the Guaranty Building and Loan Association. Others are Mr. Skelly, the financier, and Ed W. Rowland, nationally known theatrical producer, who will direct the destinies of the new playhouse.

Loan Concern Plans Building in Inglewood

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE]

INGLEWOOD, Oct. 31.—State Building and Loan Commissioner E. A. Falch, a recent speaker before a joint meeting of the Inglewood Rotary and Lions clubs, with the latter as the host, had the pleasure of being the first to announce tentative plans for a $100,000 building for the Peoples Building and Loan Association of this city, as well as the probable increase of its capitalization to a million dollars.

The building and loan commissioner was the guest at the luncheon of Sanford M. Anderson, president of the Peoples Building and Loan, to whom he gave high praise for his ability in bringing the association from a $25,000 capitalization two years ago, up to its present growth.

Orange County Men Planning Harbor Club

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

SANTA ANA, Oct. 31. — More than thirty men will meet at the Newport Harbor Yacht Club November 16, next, to organize a luncheon club to be devoted entirely to boosting Orange County Harbor at Newport Beach, it was announced today.

Six men were present at the meeting, at which it was decided to form the club. Harry Williamson and George Middleton were asked to secure ten members from Costa Mesa. George T. Peabody and Walter Burris were asked to secure ten members from Newport Beach, and Charles Way and W. L. Briggs were asked to secure a like number from Balboa.

BUILDING AT ONTARIO HAS LARGE GAIN

Permits Issued for Eleven Residences With Thirteen More Planned

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

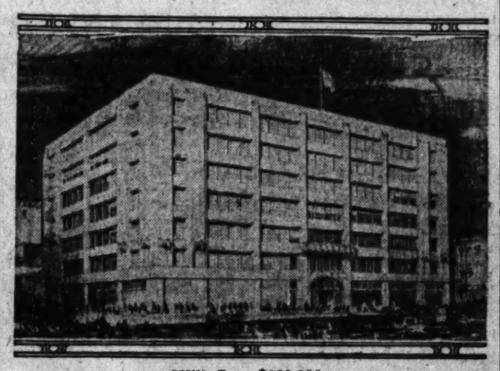
ONTARIO, Oct. 29.—The month's building record in Ontario was given a goodly boost this week when Dan Jones was issued permits by City Building Inspector O. S. Roen to build simultaneously eleven dwellings representing an aggregate expenditure of $34,000. This boosts the month's total to $151,975 and that for the year to date to $708,850.

The new dwellings are to range in cost from $2800 to $3500 each and are to be built on an extension of H street east from Campus to Berlyn avenue. As soon as these are completed, Mr. Jones has plans to erect thirteen more dwellings of similar type in the same block.

Previous to this latest venture, Mr. Jones has during the past five years erected more than 100 houses in Ontario, ranging in size from four to six rooms and representing an aggregate investment of more than $400,000. All are built for sale on easy payment plans.

Mr. Jones today expressed the belief that Ontario is on the verge of an unusual wave of prosperity, declaring abundant indications of improved business conditions on all sides. He admitted that the Florida "boom" has hurt this section, but predicted within the coming ten months a greater prosperity for Ontario and Southern California than ever before.

Seven-Story Loft Structure



Will Cost $180,000

Construction is to start within ten days on this warehouse for Dr. Spurgeon V. Riley. On completion it is understood the structure is to be used for light manufacturing purposes. It will be built by the Mann Building Company, Inc.

LOFT STRUCTURE PLANNED

Construction of a seven-story reinforced concrete loft building, representing an investment of approximately $180,000 will be started within the next ten days, according to the Mann Building Company, Inc., member of the Southern California Chapter, Associated General Contractors of America, on the southwest corner of Eleventh and Santee streets.

According to the plans prepared by C. C. Frye, the building will have a frontage of 150 feet on Eleventh street and eighty-five feet on Santee street, and will contain approximately 90,000 square feet of floor space. The building, it is understood, will be subdivided into quarters suitable for light manufacturing purposes.

The Mann Building Company, Inc., in addition to having secured the contract for the erection of the structure have been selected to act as leasing agents for the owner, Dr. Spurgeon V. Riley.

START WORK ON SEWAGE SYSTEM

Inglewood Lets Contract on First Section

Oak Street Unit to be Built for $54,000

Will Serve Town as Major Trunk Line

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE]

INGLEWOOD, Oct. 31.—Work was begun this week on the initial project in County Sanitation District No. 5, for which $2,500,000 was voted some months ago for the joint outfall and connections of the sewage disposal plans of the county metropolitan sewers.

The first work undertaken is known as the Oak Street-Center avenue sewer. It will extend from the intersection of Hawthorne Boulevard and Center street north and east to Redondo Boulevard and will be the principal service trunk for the disposal of Inglewood sewage into the main trunk of the joint outfall, for ultimate disposal in the ocean off White's Point.

The contract price for this section is about $54,000 for the approximately four and one-half miles. The contract was given to Magenovich and Gillespie and the work is under the eye of Arthur W. Cory, resident engineer of County Sanitation District No. 5 and former Inglewood City Engineer.

COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT

SURVEYS UNDER WAY IN DISTRICT

Last Unit 3300-Acre Area Offers Fine View

Was Bean and Barley Ranch but Four Years Ago

Schools, Churches, Theaters All Are Available

BY AN OBSERVER

Westwood Hills, the last unit of the 3300-acre tract owned by the Janss Investment Company and known as Westwood, is now being subdivided for the real estate market. This is the portion of the tract immediately adjoining the site for the new University of California, at Los Angeles. The company's engineers are now engaged in running the property lines in this district.

In view this last unit entirely dominates the entire project and offers a complete and unparalleled panorama of Los Angeles, Hollywood, Beverly Hills and the bay and harbor districts.

SCHOOLS BUILT

Educationally, one of its biggest features, the area will probably be as nearly perfect as a home community as is possible. Already one grammar school has been completed and another is now being planned. One high school is available and the site for another has been acquired and with the completion of the University of California project it will be possible for a resident of the district to complete the education of children from the kindergarten classes to college commencement without, figuratively speaking, leaving their parental roof.

BUSINESS AREAS

Stores and shops have been provided in the business areas and theaters and churches are adjacent to the property. A branch City Hall has been erected for the administration of civic affairs and the Bureau of Power and Light constructed their own building on the property.

The Westwood tract might be called Los Angeles' most modern home community. Of the 1000 homes in the district none is more than forty months old. A little more than three years ago it was a vast bean and barley field. Opened as a subdivision by the Janss Investment Company at that time, its activity has kept it in the real estate limelight ever since. Its greatest achievement came recently when it was selected for the ne whome of the University of California, Southern Branch.

CONTRACT LET

A contract has been awarded to John M. Cooper, who also prepared the plans for a two-story and basement reinforced concrete store and office building at State and Figueroa streets, Santa Barbara. The structure will cost $225,000 when completed and will contain thirty-two stores with shops and offices above.

NEW BANK STRUCTURE

Plans are being prepared by H. A. Minten, San Francisco architect, for a one-story reinforced concrete bra..h bank building on Main street near Second, for the Capital Company. The entire space will be devoted to banking purposes.

WATER FIND IS SURPRISE TO FARMERS

Well on Hot Springs Road from Capistrano Promises Irrigation

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE]

SANTA ANA, Oct. 31.—Development of water by the James O'Neill estate on its cattle ranch six miles up the Hot Springs road from San Juan Capistrano promises to revolutionize the type of farming engaged in that immediate section since the padres first discovered that land of promise, it was indicated today by William Magee of San Juan Capistrano, superintendent of the O'Neill interests.

The well is 125 feet deep. The finding of water at that depth was the big surprise of the water development. The well began with an initial flow of seventy-five inches.

The tract on which the well has been drilled is under lease to W. D. Brown of Tustin. According to Magee, Brown this year will plant 200 acres of tomatoes, the first time the ground has ever been used for anything other than the raising of hay or for grazing cattle. It is expected that Brown will also plant other vegetables, depending upon whether he can develop enough deep water to irrigate other land.

"Development of water will change the type of farm crop produced on some of this acreage for ages past," Magee said.

It was pointed out here today that the value of the lands brought under irrigation would increase by several hundred per cent, and that the assessed valuation of the county would be materially increased if a large acreage is changed from grain and pasture land to vegetable and fruit crop production.

MANY BUILDING IN HUNTINGTON PARK

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE]

HUNTINGTON PARK, Oct. 31. That many that are building permanently here is shown in the building figures for the month of September. Sixty-six permits were issued, twenty-two of this number being for residences.

The dwellings are of the more substantial kind. The figures show that of the total valuation for the months of September, which was $91,220, the sum of $66,250 was for home construction.

CALIFORNIA HOME TYPE WINS FAVOR

Copied Extensively in East Declares Realty Dealer Back from Trip

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

REDLANDS, Oct. 31.—While California is hearing so much about the "boom" in Florida the rest of the country is going quietly ahead, copying for its new homes the type of dwellings most popular now in California. This is the word of W. M. Cochrane, developer of Crescent Heights, one of the finest new homesites on the hills overlooking Redlands, who has just returned from the East and Canada, where he spent the summer.

"They are copying the California type of house all over," said Mr. Cochrane, "and they are building medium-sized houses. My own niece in Joliet is now just building a regular California bungalow from plans drawn in California. And she showed me many others in Joliet. They have tile roofs and show the Spanish influence."

"The tendency all over the East is for smaller houses," he continued. "The larger structures in the big cities are co-operative apartments, owned by their occupants and large dwellings everywhere are hard to sell."

Mr. Cochrane says that all this was most interesting to him for in the developing of Crescent Heights he has had in mind the difficulty in getting servants. "Everything electrical that helps the housewife has been put in the homes in order that they may be operated with the minimum of labor," he said, "and this I find is the idea in the East. They are equipped with electric heat, electric cook stoves, with electric cleaners, washers and ironers and even with radios."

The proposed combination of the Krupp, Phoenix, Rheinstahl, Thyssen groups and the Rhine-Elbe Union would produce one-third of Germany's total steel production.

ALTADENA EXPOSITION IS POPULAR

Display of 337 Model Homes Brings 50,000 Spectators Officials Declare

The Altadena Homes Exposition, now entering on its third successful week, has attracted more than 50,000 people from all parts of Southern California and most of the other States of the Union, according to data secured from the register kept in one of the eight furnished homes that are included in the great display of 337 model houses covering nine blocks, the promoters declared yesterday.

Foothill Boulevard has been thronged with cars, many of which bore foreign licenses, and it has been necessary to keep the feature homes open long past their supposed closing hour of 10 p. m., it is declared.

According to E. P. Janes, chairman of the exposition committee, it has been decided to place on sale the entire group of model houses, even including the eight that are furnished, with the reservation, however, that the furnished group can not be occupied for a period of three weeks from today to allow the continuation of the show to its previously set closing date.

A particular demand for the eight furnished homes has been noted which has lead the committee to decide that many people prefer these houses not because they are better than the unfurnished ones, but because it is possible to visualize exactly how they will look when occupied, as every piece of furniture is in place and every article of household equipment supplied.

A daily program of entertainment and educational talks will be conducted at the exposition and the public is freely invited for the next three weeks to view the complete group of homes without charge.

COMPLETION OF PLANNING WORK NEARS

City, County Bodies Are Laying Out San Fernando Valley Area

Approaching the ideal, as nearly as possible, in city building, the city and county planning commissions are nearing completion of the work of laying out the San Fernando Valley, as a part of Los Angeles' municipality, to meet all the demands of a physical change brought about by the development of the automobile and extension of motor travel, declared M. U. Butterbaugh of the Butterbaugh & Hunnicutt Land Company. It is subdividing Ventura Boulevard Acres, located only twenty-two and one-half miles from the heart of the city, into one-acre ranches.

"For many months the two bodies, operating jointly as the Regional Planning Commission, have worked to harmonize the highway architecture of the valley, and the needs of traffic and modern community construction," he said.

"The Major Traffic Plan provides for 100-foot boulevards every mile and eighty-foot highways every half-mile, thus giving wide roadways every mile both east and west and north and south. In between are sixty-foot streets, wherever communities require them.

"It is planned that industries shall follow the railroads at community intervals, each with its merchant centers and residential districts. In between are to be maintained small ranches so as to segregate communities and prevent monotonous congestion. The chief residential section will be along Ventura Boulevard.

"Three lines of railways now cross the valley. The main inland route of the Southern Pacific, which cuts through the east end of the valley; the coast route of the system, which leads diagonally across the valley and a local service line, which handles the products."

Eight Firms Admitted to Realty Board

Eight new firms were admitted to membership in the Los Angeles Realty Board by action of the Board of Governors of that organization at a meeting held at the Clark Hotel last week.

They include J. B. Halbert & Co., Gaines Investment Co., Palos Verdes Project, B. S. Tweedale, Shattuck Company, Inc., C. J. O'Connor, George R. Kress Corporation and H. Kenneth Howe.

BOOKS SHOW BIG HOLLYWOOD DEALS

Bigger and better Hollywood real estate deals were evinced during the past week by the records of the escrow department of the Guaranty Building and Loan Association of Hollywood, as compared with the preceding week. During the past week there were nineteen escrows with a total value of $270,735, as compared with eighteen escrows, valued at $113,090 last week.

September's escrows handled by this single financial institution numbered seventy-five, valued at $611,791, according to Gilbert H. Beesemyer, secretary and manager of the association.

Move to Rush Action on Rapid Transit Plan

Action was taken yesterday by the Los Angeles Realty Board to co-operate with other civic organizations in obtaining early action on a rapid transit plan when a committee was appointed by President C. C. C. Tatum to function with committees of other associations looking into the matter.

Harry H. Culver, first vice-president of the board was named chairman. William C. Keim and J. W. Dickinson will serve with him.

Many Lots Are Sold in Tract; Plan Concerts

Lots valued at $119,420 have been sold in College Hills, Whittier in the last twenty-five days, E. L. Duffy, director of sales announced yesterday.

The tract adjoins Whittier on the east, and its own eastern boundary is marked by a natural bowl similar to the one in Hollywood. Musical circles of Whittier and the eastside plan developing this bowl, and in it duplicating the concerts which have made Hollywood bowl famous.

This, they point out would furnish high-class musical entertainment to the population of the great eastside and of the San Gabriel Valley.

CLUB'S PLANS BOOST VALUES

The progress of the Neptune Club, a beach and swimming unit located on the peninsula, midway between Palisades Del Rey and Venice, is having a marked influence upon property values in the immediate vicinity, according to M. L. Germain, president of the club.

"The coming of this club to their very doors has served to emphasize upon the property owners near by the fact that ocean frontage is going to be held more and more at a premium as time goes on," Mr. Germain says.

"There is only a limited amount of ocean frontage. Property owners and investors have failed to get the full significance of this fact, in the past, and it takes just such development as a swimming club at their front dor to make them realize this, and that the public is willing to pay well for the privilege of enjoying ocean bathing under ideal conditions, as afforded by our club.

"We feel that the development of swimming clubs and beach clubs will go farther to arouse the public to a true sense of the high value beach property rightfully should command, than any other one thing.

"The owner of ocean frontage in the future will find himself independent, and the owner of a beach club membership should certainly partake of proportionately heavy profits on his investments."

PLAN ROAD FROM MILO TO EXETER

Tulare County to Start Reconstruction Work This Winter

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

VISALIA, Oct. 31.—Reconstruction of the Yokohl mountain road leading from Exeter to Milo, within five miles of Balch Park, will be undertaken by Tulare county this winter, according to Laurence A. Moye, County Surveyor. Decision to do this work during the budget year of 1925-1926 was reached by the Supervisors.

The Yokohl road runs to the top of Blue Ridge and is considered a most important unit in the opening up of the Balch Park region to motorists.

Balch Park contains some of the most magnificent redwoods of California, unexplored caverns and other mountain attractions. It is Tulare's newest park and was donated to the county to be preserved for posterity by Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Balch of Los Angeles.

Another road will be built, opening up the park area from the Wishon district on the south. This latter road very likely will be a part of the cross-Sierra road to Mt. Whitney and Lone Pine.

Mr. Moye announces that about four miles of the present road will be rebuilt, it being necessary to reroute this much of the lateral to avoid grades. The balance of the road is a good grade now and will be widened and regraded. The work will cost about $4000.

BANKER TALKS TO REALTY MEN

Points Out Need of Close Co-operation

Discusses Importance of Sound Values

Declares Dealers Vital to Progress

That there is, and should be, a mutual business interest between bankers and realty men in the performance of a very important function in every-day business, was the opinion voiced by C. J. Shepherd, president of the People's National Bank, and former manager of the Los Angeles branch of the Federal Reserve Bank, in an address before the organization of the W. Ross Campbell Co., business and industrial-property brokers.

"Not more than ten to twenty per cent of the loans in banks are based wholly upon commerce or industry and are eligible for rediscount at Federal Reserve banks," said Mr. Shepherd. "About the same percentages are made on stocks and bonds as collateral. Though all the balance is predicated directly or indirectly upon real estate. Many loans for commercial purposes, particularly to small merchants or manufacturers, are made because of real estate owned or indirectly secured by the borrower's real estate. It naturally follows that a reasonably active real estate market is beneficial to borrowers.

"In the face of a dead market bankers will not make loans which may ultimately require the sale of real estate to liquidate. In the face of an inflated market, or a realty boom, bankers are prone to be overconservative, and consequently discount values below those which would be acceptable on a less speculative market.

"No banker, in considering a financial statement, would allow any real value to real estate in a locality where there were no realty dealers or few real-estate transfers. In turn, if the bankers cease to accept real estate as collateral, the realty business suddenly stops. In fact the mere rumor that bankers have lost faith in realty values puts a quietus on the market. Consequently legitimate dealers and conservative bankers have so much in common that there are nearly always one or more real-estate men on the directorate of every bank.

"Legitimate real-estate business, like legitimate banking or any other business, consists in meeting the needs of the community, and in changing when the needs of the community change. The beauty of Beverly Hills, the Wilshire district and Hollywood is due to acumen and foresight of wide-awake dealers.

"The thousands of small, lovely homes in and adjacent to Los Angeles were not conceived by the merchants, lawyers or doctors. Those thousands of homes have attracted thousands of workers, who must be provided with remunerative jobs. Consequently, the dealer that now serves Los Angeles best is not the one that subdivides more acreage and builds more homes, but he that builds factories or left buildings and encourages manufacturing, for it is he that creates jobs.

"This all must be done intelligently and in close co-operation between realty men and bankers, for bank credit will be needed. If failure or calamity is to be avoided, encouragement to manufacturing must be confined to those industries which can economically function here and secure a profitable market for their products. The distribution of Los Angeles' manufactured products will further advertise the city and insure its continued growth and prosperity.

"As long as the dealers plan sanely and conservatively for their city," said Mr. Shepherd in conclusion, "the bnakers will support their program."

TAX CUT BRINGS CITIZENS JOY

Huntington Park Owners Get Twenty-eight Cent Drop

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE]

HUNTINGTON PARK, Oct. 31.—Taxpayers throughout the city are finding a total reduction of 28 cents in their tax bills, as compared with a year ago.

The total tax of the $100 assessable property, both city and county, shows $4.19, as compared with $4.47 last year.

The tax for the city last year was $1.64, as against $1.33 this year.

INAUGURATION ANNOUNCED

Impressive Ceremonies to Mark Installation of New State Realty President

Harry H. Culver, builder of Culver City, and nationally known Realty dealer, will be inaugurated president of the California Real Estate Association at an impressive ceremony held in the Ambassador Hotel, at Los Angeles, early in January. The annual inaugural ball will follow the inauguration. Tentatively the dates of Saturday, January 2, or Monday, January 4, are being considered.

Plans for the annual ceremony, which will climax the first meeting of the new board of directors of the State association, are now being formulated by the State association in co-operation with the new president-elect.

Since his election, with seventy-seven real estate boards voting unanimously, President-elect Harry Culver and the State association offices have been inundated with telegrams and letters of congratulation from all over the State and nation.

MANY TO ATTEND

These communications indicate the intention of all the 100 real estate boards in California to be represented at the Culver inauguration.

The inaugural was initiated at Santa Ana by the State association last November when Everett A. White was inducted into the presidency for the short term in his home town. More than 300 attended the banquet. Several months later at Fresno, D. Richard Ainsley, the incumbent executive, was inaugurated in the presence of a large number of delegates from many boards.

The State Real Estate Commissioner Edwin T. Kelser administers the oath of office. After taking the oath, upon the Bible, the president delivers his address, outlining the policy which he proposes to follow throughout the year.

At the time of the induction of the new president, the newly elected vice-presidents, and other officers will be sworn in. There are fourteen regional districts, and the following vice-presidents were elected: Senator Walter F. Price, Santa Rosa; Arthur J. Delano, Sacramento; George C. Boardman, San Francisco; Fred R. Caldwell, Oakland; Frank Ryan, Los Angeles; Edgar T. Oakes, Los Angeles; Charles W. Stewart, Monrovia; H. P. D. Kingsbury, Redlands; Benjamin F. Wright, Monterey; Harrison Lewis, Beverly Hills; Edmund B. Lowe, Huntington Park; Thomas W. McManus, Bakersfield; Frank C. Popo, Santa Ana, and Stephen Barnson, San Diego. W. T. B. Campbell of West Hollywood will be inducted into office as State association treasurer.

ASSOCIATION PROGRESS

The association removed its offices to Los Angeles nearly four years ago, and has increased its membership nearly 200 per cent.

During the past year, the California Real Estate Association, according to President D. Richard Ainsley, again held, by a large margin, "the leadership in membership numbers of the State associations, having more active boards, and more active firms affiliated with it and paid up. This showing, Mr. Ainsley said, was due to the intense State-wide interest of the realty men in legislation and taxation, and the feeling among brokers that a State association is essential to secure State-wide recognition of the value to property owners of ethically conducted real estate brokerage.

SALES METHODS TOLD TO CLASS

Los Angeles business property development is more healthy today than ever before, declared George R. Le Baron of the W. I. Hollingsworth Company, in a lecture before a class in general real estate in the metropolitan college of the University of Southern California Monday evening. His subject was, "What Is Necessary to Be a Successful Business Property Broker."

The speaker said that the values that seemed high now would appear to be low a few years from today. He praised the equalizing effect on valuations of the 150-foot skyline in Los Angeles and said that it was a great stabilizer in itself. He dwelt on other basic factors affecting values in the downtown section.

Mr. Le Baron pointed out to the students that in one eastern city the store rents were figured on a basis of $3000 per front foot per year, while in Los Angeles $150 a month or $1800 per front foot per year was considered a high rental for a metropolitan mercantile establishment.

In figuring realty values the speaker informed the class that feminine shoppers as a rule expended for their clothes about seven times the amount spent by men for their wearing apparel, therefore, shops selling to the women could pay higher rents and the owners could claim a higher value for their frontage.

"This is a new era in real estate," asserted Mr. Le Baron. "Conditions today are much different than even five years ago. The automobile, the chain store, the methods of financing of buildings—all these influences and others as well have had their effect on the handling of real estate. And as in other walks of life the new age is better than the old."

In closing Mr. Le Baron urged the students to realize the great responsibility devolving upon the business property broker. "When you ask clients to invest anywhere from $25,000 to $2,000,000 in real estate you are taking grave responsibilities upon your shoulders and must act accordingly."

The speaker Monday evening, November 2, will be Charles A. Rudel, manager of the tax department of the Pacific-Southwest Trust and Savings Bank. His subject will be "What the Real Estate Broker Should Know About Taxation," according to an announcement yesterday by Herbert M. Harwood, instructor in charge of the course.

Prizes Offered to Architects for Sign Design

Prizes of $150, $100 and $50 are offered by the American Institute of Architects for the best designs for a tablet or sign to be placed on the grounds of the Octagon House, the headquarters of the institute.

Announcement of the competion was made yesterday by the building committee of the American Institute of Architects.

"The building committee desires through a competition to secure a design for a tablet, sign or historical device which will be dignified and beautiful and at the same time sufficiently conspicuous to attract the attention of the passerby. The purpose is to inform the public as to the historic and architectural importance of the building.

Adjoining Sites in Trade Area Leased by Firm

Negotiations for the ground leasing of two adjoining properties at 818-826 East Second street were completed during the past week by the J. W. Lewis Company.

The K. N. Nanba Auto Repair Company is the lessee, the total rentals involved approximating $125,000.

The property at 826 East Second street, owned by Minnie R. Perkins, was leased for a period of fifty years; while the property at 818 East Second street, owned by the James H. Dodge estate, was leased for a shorter term; the combined holdings have a frontage of 100 feet on Second street and extend through to Azusa street, comprising a ground area of more than 15,000 square feet.

INVENTS NEW WIRELESS SET

Considerable comment has arisen in radio manufacturing circles by the discovery of a new principal in radio, which has been developed in Los Angeles by California inventors. This principal does away with the old-style condenser and eliminates much of the complicated tuning apparatus, its inventor declares.

These radio sets will be manufactured by the International Radio Corporation, which has established its offices at 145 Pacific Electric Depot. According to Gene Holmes, an official of the corporation, the Los Angeles factory will supply the territory west of the Mississippi, while provisions are being made in the East for manufacture of the set in other factories.

"The distinguishing feature of the new radio is the extreme simplicity of operation," explained Mr. Holmes. "On the outside of the cabinets the only visible mechanism is an off and loud switch and one wooden knob. Turning this knob brings numbers to view in a small pannel and the instant the right one is reached, the station bursts forth loud and clear. It does not take a second to find the station and one complete revolution of the dial brings in everything on the air.

"Radio fans who have worked for long periods in an attempt to get a station properly and eliminate interference, will certainly appreciate this new principal of automatic tuning. It is no longer necessary to adjust one dial after another to a hair's breadth and then adjust numerous other controls to eliminate intereference.

Safeguarded against Hazard

WHEN a financial enterprise attempts to safeguard all investors against hazards, their offering must be one which embodies all requisites of a good investment.

In the purchase of 7% cumulative preferred shares of the Rim of the World Lands, Inc., the security buyer is afforded the opportunity to share in a plan which is unusual because of its many features for stability.

Here one may share in the largest mountain subdivision project of Southern California . . . where roads will be open the entire year 'round, allowing accessibility to the property 365 days in the year . . . where land is being sold at one-third of the appraised value of three prominent Realty Appraisers . . . where improvements aggregating several hundred thousand dollars are to be put in, affording this one of the most beautiful mountain resorts in America—and, above all, an insurance policy on every parcel of land against depreciation of the purchase price.

It is a combination plan of pleasure with profit, for here, resting among the beautiful San Bernardino Mountains lies approximately 2000 acres of land where a vista can be obtained from the desert and the sea, where a beautiful lake is to be constructed, and good roads entwining all through the property. In Southern California there is probably no sight like this. Thus, we are of the firm opinion that with the huge profit possibilities, combined with the pleasure to be obtained in a region such as we are offering you, this is an opportunity rarely presented in the history of California's financial and real estate operations.

"SCALE" IN HOME VERY ESSENTIAL

Harmony Gained by Instinct, Designer Declares

Various Types of Dwellings Differ in Problems

Home Illustrated Today Has Compact Roominess

BY ARTHUR R. HUTCHASON, Architect

"Scale," as the word is used among architects, means the relative size of contiguous parts of a building. A moulding, a doorway or any other feature or part is "out of scale" when its size is relatively not in harmony with other features or parts of the same structure. Scale is a very hard thing to describe and harder still to get into a building. It is in great part a matter of feeling. It is the last thing arrived at by most designers.

Two houses may be the same size and yet be very difficult in "scale." Compare the little Dutch colonial house designed by Charles F. Maury shown this week, with a Spanish house. The Dutch colonial is small in scale; it has many fine, delicate mouldings and has no broad wall surfaces. The Spanish house will have few, but bold, mouldings, fe wwindows and much blank wall.

A typical piece of furniture to go into the Dutch colonial is a delicate Windsor chair; a typical piece for the Spanish house would be a heavy oak chest. The hardware, the lighting fixtures, the patterns in the rugs, would all be in a different scale in the two houses. In fact, everything in the two houses would be keyed to a different scale except the plumbing, and yet both might be equally good in scale.

This difference is not at all arbitrary. It arose from a difference of materials in the buildings, the mental habits of the occupants and many other reasons all perfectly logical.

In another sense there is the "human scale." There are certain physical limitations to the size of a chair, for instance. It must be the proper size to sit on. A balustrade, for instance, should have about a certain size to be in human scale, when marking entrances to parks. If the normal size of a balustrade is not large enough to mark properly the entrances, some other motive should be used.

The compact little house illustrated here affords astonishing roominess in small space. There are five spacious rooms of easy access, totaling 1670 square feet of floor area, which the architect estimates will cost $6200.

Its domestic quality and its dignified symmetry bestow an air of quiet respect upon it. Its sturdy entrance door bespeaks soundness, substantial reliability. It is relieved from severity, however, by the friendly treatment of its arched fan-light.

Small House Plan Service

Plans for this home were prepared under the auspices of the Architectural Club of Los Angeles for the Small House Plan Service maintained on the sixth floor of the Metropolitan Building at Fifth and Broadway. Working drawings for this and other designs may be seen and studied there.

LANDSCAPING SUGGESTIONS

The landowner whose place lies on the hillside faces the problem of handling the land to make it attractive, and at the same time usable. Terraces are one of the best solutions, for by this means much of the land can be leveled, though on varying grades. And the tops of the terraces can be planted and cared for as in other grounds, only the slopes requiring special attention.

Nearest the house itself, lawns are always pleasing and on terraced land show up effectively by reason of the grade. Sunken effects may be just as interesting, too, as elevations. One of the prettiest treatments of the sloping lot is to terrace close to the house, giving a good foundation about the house, and then level the land, bringing it up in a rise at the street again and perhaps along the side borders of the lot. Where leveling requires a steep embankment at the front of the lot, flowers are often charming planted to cover this land. Such bright used flowers as verbena are splendid, for they make a good showing. Petunias are also good choice, because they sprawl artistically and hide the bare earth. Marguerites will be pleasing, too, on the terrace, if planted snuggly in pockets and such cherry flowers as gallardia and transvaal daisy may make a slope alluring.

For plants of trailing habit, one may choose lobelia, with its bright blue flowers, ice plant that bears pink blooms, and vines for shady slopes. Lippia repens is also used for a cover on steep slopes where lawn will not grow and is very drough resisting. It makes a soft grayish green carpet patterns with tiny flowers of white and lavender.

SUGGESTIONS FOR FURNISHING HOME

A very pretty style being adopted in some of the new homes is the papering of doors, to match the walls of a room. Especially is this treatment pleasing in a bedroom of a small size where one wishes to add to its apparent wall space. And in larger rooms, the use of floral motifs cut from paper and set on the panels of doors gives the effect of pictures, framed as they are, by the woodwork of the doorway.

NEW FAD

Another fad making use of wallpaper is the placing of a strip beneath the glass push-plate of a swinging door. On the dining-room side, a flowery strip of paper will be decorative and on the kitchen side of the door, paper that matches the color scheme of the room will be attractive, as plain blue or green, for example.

GAY FURNITURE

Gayly colored furniture is decidedly popular at the present time for the use in every room in the house. In the bedroom, a dressing table of blue lacquer is charming with a suite of gray enamel and in cottage bedroom seen recently, a set of ivory was made much more alluring by a wicker chair of light green that was placed here to offer contrast. Just one piece of brightly colored furniture will often give the individual note desired.

LATEST CURTAINS

One of the newest types of porch curtains is the splint curtain, which is colored in two-tone effects, particularly too, because it is waterproof and fadeproof. Awnings in stripes, or in a plain color, are equally in favor and are often chosen to match slip covers or the furniture on the porch. Old furniture that has become shabby from weather or wear takes on new interest with fresh slip covers, that may be made up in a number of designs.

CLOSES FLORIDA DEAL

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE]

HUNTINGTON PARK, Oct. 31—C. D. Funk, real estate dealer, was one of the first business men here to send a telegram through the new Western Union Telegraph Office which opened here this week. He wired to North Dakota in connection with the sale of 640 acres of land near Miami, Florida. Funk left here this morning for Florida to close the deal.

Agents Named for Hill-Street Office Building

That the Paden-Pelton Building, 728 South Hill street, owned by A. G. Hubbard of Redlands, Cal., has been placed in charge of the property management department of the W. Ross Campbell Company, business property brokers, was the announcemeat made yesterday by Clem Glass, vice-president of that organization.

The Paden-Pelton Building is a height-limit, up-to-date office and showroom structure of reinforced concrete, comprising approximately 90,000 square feet. A resident manager will maintain an office in the building, under direct supervision of the Campbell firm, it was announced.

Improvements planned for the building include increased lighting facilities for offices and showrooms.

TUNNELS APPROVED

The construction of forty-six tunnels at various locations recommended by the Board of Education, has been approved by the City Engineer. These tunnels are expected to cost about $10,000 each.

PLAN ELKS LODGE

John Parkinson and Donald B. Parkinson are preparing plans for a three-story and basement store and lodge building at Santa Barbara for the Elks' Lodge. The structure llill cost $300,000.

One of Latest Stucco Designs

Extremely unique in the compact arrangement of the rooms, every foot of space in the above plan is accounted for. The breakfast room is situated in the front part of the house, considered an ideal location. According to the designers of this home, Pacific Ready-Cut Homes, Inc., the dwelling can be built for about $4100. Working drawings are on exhibition in the firm's offices.

REAL ESTATE and BUILDING LAW

A Department for the Property Owner and Home Builder
Conducted by the Legal Department of the W. Ross Campbell Company

Question: When I purchase a lot, do I own the sky above it, and must public utilites companies get my permission before wires are strung across it?

Answer: Theoretically, when one acquires a fee simple title to a piece of land, one owns from the center of the earth to the heavens above. Practically, however, there are many limitations put upon one's use of land, and particularly in our very rapidly growing cities. Our modern subdivisions do not pretend to deed beyond the property line. In other words, the street in front of a lot is first reserved and usually deeded to the city or county, but in the older subdivisions the lot was described as running to the center of the street, and that portion of the lot lying under the street right of way was subject to that easement, so that the owner of the lot could use it only so far as his use did not interfere with the public right of easement. This carried with it the right to erect and maintain public utility poles, wires, etc., along the street right of way. Of course, it seems hardly necessary to state that a telephone company, for instance, will have no right to run wires across your lot unless they have first obtained your permission, or unless they had a previously granted right of easement, as is sometimes the case so far as the rear of many city lots is concerned.

Q.: Why, in the case of a building loan, do mortgage companies insist that their building loan mortgage be recorded before the work of building commences?

A.: For the same reason that the owner of the lot should see that his builder's contract and builder's bond are filed in the Recorder's office before any work is done or materials furnished. This was very fully explained in last week's questions and answers. Briefly, it is because the mortgage company wants the lien of its mortgage to be first, and not second to any possible mechanic's liens, which might be filed against the property during the progress of the building. The mortgage must be placed on record before any work is done or materials delivered to the lot. Otherwise it will be subject to any liens filed during any of the period of construction.

Q.: It often happens that one erecting a building finds that he has miscalculated his finances, and needs an additional loan to complete the building. Why is it difficult to secure a loan under these circumstances?

A.: The answer to this question is contained in the previous answer, viz., that the building operations have commenced, and it would therefore be impossible for the second mortgagee to get his mortgage on record so that it would be a prior lien on the premises to any possible mechanics' liens. It would, therefore, be incumbent upon the money lender (mortgagee) to make a very thorough investigation of the exact status of the construction work, and particularly in regard to whether or not all bills of subcontractors, material men and laborers had been paid in so far as they are due. As to such bills and claims for the remainder of the construction work, it would be necessary for this second mortgagee to have some personal control over the payment of the same unless the contractor was such a thoroughly reliable person or corporation that this precaution would be unnecessary. Needless to say, it is not good business policy to trust anyone in this respect, and therefore mortgage and building loan companies make it a positive rule not to do so.

Q.: What is meant by posting a notice of owner's nonresponsibility for mechanics' liens?

A.: This can best be illustrated by a hypothetical case. A owns a building containing storerooms, which he leases to tenants. One of these storerooms is leased by a drug-store concern, who immediately contracts with a fixture company to install a complete set of drug-store counters, wainscotting, etc. These fixtures are installed and the drug-store company fails to pay the bill for them. The fixture company liens the premises, and the landlord is obliged to pay the bill to release his premises from the lien. Had he complied with the requirements of Section 1192 of the C.C.P. California, he would not have been liable to pay this bill. That law provides that if the landlord shall within ten days after he has obtained knowledge of such construction, alteration or repair work or labor, give notice that he will not be responsible for the same by posting a notice in writing to that effect, in some conspicuous place upon the property, and shall also within the same period file for record a verified copy of said notice in the office of the County Recorder, such notice to contain a description of the property with the name and nature of the title or interest of the landlord, that he shall in that case be relieved from such liability. It is for this reason that a properly drawn lease contains a provision that no repairs or alterations shall be made by the tenant without the written consent of the landlord. This necessarily means that the tenant must notify the landlord of the proposed work, thus giving to the landlord a chance to file and post this notice of no liability. Such a clause as this is particularly necessary in long-term leases, where it is usually provided that no such work shall be done by the tenant without first notifying the landlord of intention so to do, for it is manifestly unfair to compel a tenant to obtain the consent of his landlord to make repairs to a building, where he is practically the owner of the property, as in the case of a ninety-nine-year lease.

NOVEL PACK GAINS MART FOR WOMAN

Ina Dell Orchard Products in Fancy Containers to be Sold by Bullock's

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

WODLAKE, Oct. 31.—Packing of fancy California fruits, nuts and preserves has begun at the Ina Dell orchards with a crew of twenty women. The present pack consists of fancy dried fruits and nuts. The parcels are packed in a large variety of containers, assembled from all parts of the world, with China, Japan and Germany the principal sources of supply.

Mrs. Davis recently attracted to her fancy marketing plan the Bullock interests of Los Angeles, who are taking over the sales department, leaving Mrs. Davis free to devote her time to preparation of the product.

This enterprise was started by Mrs. Davis in a small way about four years ago and met with such instant success that she seemed unable to supply the demand until the southern firm came to her assistance. These parcels will be sold in fifteen large stores of the Bullock chain throughout the United States. Each parcel will bear the Ina Dell orchards label, Woodlake Valley thus receiving some valuable publicity.

Fancy oranges will also be packed for the coming Christmas trade.

Begin Work on New Alhambra Trade Buildings

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE]

ALHAMBRA, Oct. 31. — Two new business buildings were started here this week and the outlook for continued construction activity this fall is bright, according to the forecast of City Building Inspector C. E. Jenkins.

At the northwest corner of Main street and Primrose avenue, is to be a twenty-eight-room, two-story store and apartment building, and will cost $30,000. The permit was taken out by J. J. Silwinski and C. H. Welland, both of Alhambra. Construction is in charge of the Powell Construction Company.

A one-story brick building is being erected at 39 South Garfield avenue by the Prudential Mortgage Company of Los Angeles. H. R. Setterland of Alhambra is the contractor and the cost will be $5000.

HOTEL PLANNED

M. J. Brock has prepared plans for the erection of a three-story brick store and hotel building at 1221-23 1-2 South Central avenue for Morris Glickstein. It will cost about $75,000 and will contain forty hotel rooms.

LET WAREHOUSE CONTRACT

The Goodyear Tire and Rubber Company has awarded a contract to the Lynch-Cannon Construction Company at $205,000 for their four-story reinforced concrete warehouse on Central avenue near Florence avnue.

Builders' Questions Answered

By Southern California Chapter of Associated General Contractors

Question: Very large cracks have appeared in the plaster inside of the dining-room of my home completed about three months ago. Will you please advise me what caused the cracks and how they can be repaired?

Answer: The cracks may have been caused by the use of inferior materials, a poor grade of lath, shrinkage of lumber, settling of the foundation or poor workmanship in applying the first and finish coats. The remedy will depend on to what extent the cracks have opened. We would advise you to have a reliable plastering contractor visit the building and suggest the proper method of correcting the error.

Q.: The cement walks in front of my home have cracked in several places. As they have been placed only a short time am anxious to know the cause. Will you please advise me and can they be repaired?

A.: In this case it is evident that too lean a mixture was used, and no doubt the walk was not covered with earth and kept wet a sufficient time for the cement to cure. If the cracks are large replace the entire section.

Q.: I have contracted for a home, the purchase price being $6500. I have paid $1500 as the down payment and have promised to pay the remainder in equal monthly payments in two years' time, the payments to include interest at 7 per cent. Will you please advise me how much the monthly payments will be, including interest?

A.: It will require the payment of $223.86 (to the nearest cent) monthly for twenty-four months to discharge a $5000 obligation with interest included.

Q.: Will you advise me if there is a tile substitute for bathrooms, kitchens, etc.?

A.: There is a sanitary wall covering on the market that gives the effect of tile, and is suitable for bathrooms, kitchens, corridors, etc., it is claimed by the manufacturers. We understand this tile covering comes in large boards similar to other wall boards and is easily installed.

Q.: I have just about enough money to make the first payment on a home. What I contemplate doing is to finance through a building and loan company and building; however, I am told that it is not the time to build now as prices may fluctuate considerable in the next three months. Will you advise me if it is advisable for me to wait a few months before building?

A.: While prices may fluctuate in the next three months you do not have any assurance that they will decline, on the other hand it is indicative that the possibility of an increase you would save, should a marked decrease in cost, would not equal the paid out in rent in the If you wait a few may increase and in money expended for been wasted, as far concerned. Build now, home and you will become a factor in nity but you will have duty to your family.

Q.: I have been can be purchased that is, it is mixed at plant and delivered to to place in the forms please advise if this if the plan is satisfac

A.: Concrete, is mixed at a plant and with a radius of twenty miles by one Los Angeles understand. Several tractors building floors and walks pure concrete ready mixed, ally have approved of of handling small concrete.

Q.: Will you please many sacks of cement number of cubic feet required to place a four inches thick in a by seven by twenty feet?

A.: To place a four-eighteen by twenty materials required will be sacks of cement, sixty feet of sand and cubic feet of pebbles stone.

Q.: Will you please long it will take to pay deed of $6000, payable month including interest?

A.: It will take two than eighty-five months plete the payments.

of Hawthorne, California

HAWTHORNE Junction of 4 Transportation Lines CALIFORNIA

HAWTHORNE On Five Boulevards CALIFORNIA

—On the edge of Los Angeles—where Hawthorne begins—a great city building program is under way.

HAWTHORNE'S GROWTH is remarkable, and greater growth is in sight. All property values are feeling the stimulus of the tremendous growth during the past two years.

—and values are steadily increasing. If you are a property owner in Hawthorne you may share in the prosperity that has come to Hawthorne to stay.

HAWTHORNE IS A CITY OF HOMES—They have been built and sold with great rapidity. On three short streets alone there are 62 new houses—and these houses often are sold before they are finished.

HAWTHORNE has 16 miles of new pavement completed, and petitions are out for more pavement.

HAWTHORNE'S BUSINESS OPPORTUNITIES are among the best, for Hawthorne stores have not been built to meet the demand from the thousands of new homes built and occupied.

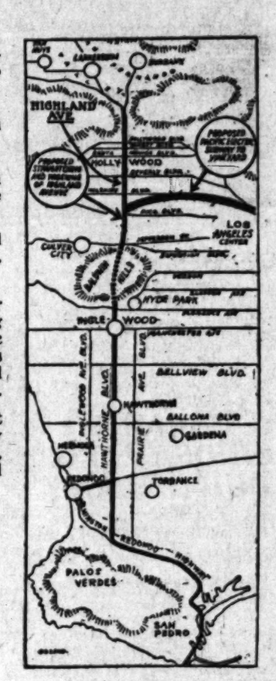
HAWTHORNE'S need today is MORE BUSINESS BLOCKS. The business is here. Fully 20,000 people in Hawthorne and ITS VICINITY are ready to trade in Hawthorne.

HAWTHORNE'S present immediate need is, first, a modern THEATRE, built on the Spanish plan, with a seating capacity of approximately 1000 and to cost approximately $150,000.

NEXT should be immediately built a mammoth department store, carrying as complete a stock as can be found in any of the department store of Los Angeles. Such a department store will attract the buying public from all the surrounding small cities, especially the beach cities of Redondo and Hermosa Beach.

The traffic situation is such that already many of the larger department stores in Los Angeles are considering establishing suburban stores on a large scale, and especially on the wide traffic boulevards such as we have in Hawthorne. Already a site has been considered in Hawthorne, and in the near future plans will be announced with the view of financing a project of this kind.

A HAWTHORNE HOTEL, a tourists' hotel of the highest type should be built at once—a hotel on the type of one recently built at Fullerton or Glendale, where every comfort is offered, and where Hawthorne people can gather for their banquets and their social gatherings.



Proposed Highland Ave. Boulevard will connect with the present Inglewood-Hawthorne Blvd. The 170-ft. blvd., L. A. to Sea.

THE NEW HAWTHORNE PLAZA THEATER
John J. Frauenfelder, Architect.
To be built by the Hopkins-McNeil Investment Co.

Hawthorne

On 170-Foot Boulevard

THESE are the three things that Hawthorne lacks—that are needed perhaps today:

ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND DOLLARS should be spent on the THEATER.

ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND DOLLARS should be spent on a DEPARTMENT STORE.

ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND DOLLARS should be spent on a HOTEL PROJECT.

THIS THREE HUNDRED THOUSAND DOLLARS is the smallest biggest investment that can be made, we believe, in Southern California today.

IT IS SMALL because the amount of $300,000 in any city doesn't seem like a large figure in these days when we talk of millions.

IT IS BIG because this sum, conservatively spent in substantial, artistic structures, will create a great building activity in the business section of Hawthorne and should add millions of actual valuation to Hawthorne property.

THIS PAGE ANNOUNCEMENT, appearing in The Los Angeles Sunday Times and other daily and weekly papers in the neighborhood cities of Hawthorne, could just as well have been briefly stated in a classified ad under Business Opportunities, and worded to the effect that we have business opportunities in Hawthorne—that we have opportunities for the butcher, the baker and the candlestick maker, and that profits can be made by opening up any line of legitimate business in Hawthorne.

BUT WE SAID "NO! HAWTHORNE OFFERS A BIG OPPORTUNITY, IT IS A CHANCE FOR BIG MEN AND WE MUST STATE OUR MESSAGE IN A BIG WAY."

HAWTHORNE NEEDS YOU—if you are a merchant and have the financial backing for stores.

HAWTHORNE NEEDS YOU—if you are in a position to finance and manage the stock for department stores.

HAWTHORNE NEEDS YOU—if you have the money to furnish and manage an ideal tourists' hotel.

HAWTHORNE NEEDS YOU—if you have the means TO LOAN on real estate security—first mortgage building loans for the department store or hotel project. A $25,000 loan on an 8 per cent basis, where the security is at least three times the loan, should interest anyone who is willing to put his money out on first mortgages at 8 per cent.

HAWTHORNE NEEDS YOU—and will REPAY you WITH INTEREST.

THE HAWTHORNE MEN THAT PAY FOR THIS ADVERTISEMENT—this business opportunity investment—want to meet you personally. They will appreciate the opportunity to present their plans, which are to be a factor in the building of Hawthorne.

THERE ARE THOSE OF YOU who will read between the lines and will make up your minds that greater activity is coming into the city of Hawthorne with its beautiful paved streets and its ornamental lights and its wonderful transportation lines.

AND YOU WILL SAY TO YOURSELF: "I will slip into Hawthorne after dark and pick up some of those cheap buys on Hawthorne's five boulevards and I will take advantage of the advance that is coming and make some real money."

THAT'S JUST WHAT WE WANT YOU TO DO. Only come in the early morning rather than the shades of evening, because these great boulevard bargains may not last until the eventide.

THE HOPKINS-McNEIL INVESTMENT CO. OF HAWTHORNE, CALIFORNIA, proposes to build the HAWTHORNE PLAZA THEATER.

THE HOPKINS-McNEIL INVESTMENT CO. has chosen the well-known architect, JOHN J. FRAUENFELDER of Los Angeles, to superintend the architecture and construction of the Hawthorne Theater.

THIS THEATER will be built on the famous Church Square, Lot V, on the map as the Hawthorne Circle, Hawthorne Way and Acacia Avenue. The parking space surrounding the theater will be the finest of any in Southern California.

THE HOPKINS-McNEIL INVESTMENT CO. has already leased this theater to Chotiner Theaters, Inc.

THERE WILL BE five stores in the theater block, which will be rented so that the total rental will be in the neighborhood of $1000 monthly.

The theater construction investment will be approximately $75,000. This refers entirely to the actual building. The theater property was acquired during a lull period and was purchased under $15,000. The building of the theater on this property will enhance its value. It has been conservatively estimated to be around $50,000 hence

THE HOPKINS-McNEIL INVESTMENT CO. is offering to its stockholders $85,000 conservative valuation which should be actually worth $125,000 on completion.

THE HAWTHORNE PLAZA THEATER is being financed by the Hopkins-McNeil Investment Co. by the sale of its stock on the basis of two one hundred-dollar preferred 8 per cent shares and a bonus of one share of common stock for a total purchase price of $200. No commission is being paid to brokers and agents for the sale of these units.

FOOTHILL CITY GROWING FAST

Year's Permits to Date Show 30 Per Cent Gain

Bulk of Activity is Confined to New Dwellings

Advantages of Annexation Are Being Realized

MRS. BERNICE R. PALMER

Eagle Rock, nestling in the foothills, seven miles from the center of Los Angeles, is distinctly a city of homes. By encouraging only residential and business property, has escaped all fluctuating industrial booms but has enjoyed a steady growth that is marked this year by an increase in building permits that already exceeds last year's to date by 30 per cent and promises by reach more than a total of $2,000,000.

It is one of the fastest growing communities in the fast-growing southland according to public-utility statistics. From a population of 1800 in 1911, soon after its foundation, Eagle Rock has increased to 15,000, based on service connections made by the utilities in this district.

Development in the south and east has had a great deal to do with bringing this year's building permits up to the $2,328,387 mark reached at the end of September. Last year at this time the total valuation of permits was $1,794,048. Most of these permits are for residential properties.

IS PART OF CITY

Eagle Rock was a separate city until a few years ago but realizing that its progress would eventually call for metropolitan services, it annexed itself to Los Angeles. Prior to that, however, it had developed a complete business district and after annexation retained all the advantages of this. It thus has good markets and stores of all kinds, has its own newspaper and theaters, and two banks with deposits of nearly $2,500,000.

Along with its business activity, Eagle Rock retained its own fire and police protection, augmented by the metropolitan departments. A fire company is stationed at the Eagle Rock City Hall and a police substation also is operated there. With the completion of the new stations, one for fire at Annandale and the other for police at York Boulevard, Eagle Rock will have its old and new districts amply protected.

Other metropolitan departments give service to Eagle Rock residents in their own territory. The building department maintains offices there, the water bureau, and other public utilities have branch offices for the convenience of their patrons in this district.

Since annexation, public improvements on a large scale have been started, chief among which is the three-unit sewer system and the construction of storm drains. One unit of a modern sewer system has been completed and two more are in progress.

PLAN MANY SCHOOLS

Included in the building activities outlined for the next few months is a school-building program reaching a total of $750,000. The largest of these projected schools is the new high school to be in the Happyland district. Eleven acres have already been purchased and $450,000 has been appropriated for its construction.

The other new schools are the San Rafael school at a cost of $72,850, a twelve-room Eagle Rock school at $80,000 and the Dahlia Heights school at $80,000. Much of this work is now under way.

An asset of great importance to this community is the new municipally owned playground adjoining the site of the new High School. A committee composed of Mrs. H. I. Cruson, Mrs. Rollin McNitt, Mrs. L. M. Maynard, Mrs. A. E. Riley and Secretary Butler of the Eagle Rock Chamber of Commerce recently met with the Los Angeles Playground Commission, which promised them a swimming pool to be completed in the new playground by next spring.

All-year swimming is planned for the pool, owing to its proximity to the new high school which will supply the heat for the warming of the water during the winter months. Other features of the playground will be a clubhouse to cost $70,000; a rustic theater, picnic grounds, outdoor gymnasium, basketball field, tennis courts, girls' and children's playgrounds, with wading pool and an athletic field.

MANY ADVANTAGES

Additional recreational advantages of the Eagle Rock district are gained by the nearness of the Griffith Park municipal playground and such fine golf clubs as the Oakmont, Annandale and Flintridge.

Occidental College, with its educational opportunities, has been one cause for the growth of Eagle Rock and the southern section in particular. The institution has more than 500 men and women students and has just completed a new dormitory for women. A famed feature of the college is the Greek Bowl, which has been practically completed.

Despite the fact that Eagle Rock is essentially a residential city, it is so well supplied with transportation facilities that the neighboring industrial districts are reached very easily and cheaply. The yellow car line, supplemented by the busses to the east and south, connects Los Angeles with Eagle Rock, and a stage line between Glendale, Hollywood, Pasadena and the beaches, also serves the community.

Four great arteries lead into this district for motor traffic and the completion of the La Loma Road will give it a fifth. This road, winding through one of the most scenic of residential districts in this region, will connect Eagle Rock and Pasadena by way of California street, as well, as Pasadena avenue.

BIG DAHLIA FARM

One of the largest dahlia farms in the world is situated here, and the growing of these flowers is so popular that the city is frequently known as "the dahlia city." The fame of the splendid varieties grown here is spread as far east as New York, where a permanent exhibit of dahlias is maintained by an Eagle Rock nursery.

Among the progressive organizations of the district, aiding in the civic development, are the Women's Twentieth Century Club, and the Greater Eagle Rock Club. The latter has done much toward furthering the growth of the district by community advertising.

The Chamber of Commerce, Realty Board and Kiwanis Club also contribute materially to the progress of the city. Many fraternal organizations maintain lodges here and cultural advantages are offered by the numerous organizations for women.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

LINDSAY, Oct. 31.—V. R. Smith, local olive grower, who has been canning his fruit in Southern California the past two years, has returned to Lindsay and is building a plant on the Southern Pacific right-of-way north of Lindsay. This plant will have a capacity of 250 cases daily and will employ as high as twenty-five persons.

Smith started processing his own fruit three years ago with an output of 1400 cases from an improvised plant erected at his grove. He anticipates about 7000 cases as this season's output. With exception of a few large sizes which he is buying, the fruit is being grown on his own twenty-acre orchard northwest of Lindsay.

Every detail of the business is personally supervised by Smith, in addition to the care of a twenty-acre orange grove he purchased this summer.

Frank Hammer, local contractor, is erecting the new building, which will be constructed on a two-acre site purchased by Smith. It will be 62x140 feet.

Smith has brought his family back to Lindsay to reside.

HOTEL CONTRACT LET

A contract has been awarded to Treyhitt & Shields for a twelve-story and basement, 400-room hotel building at Orange Drive and Hollywood Boulevard for the Hotel Holding Company. The structure will be of reinforced concrete construction and will cost about $2,500,000.

STORE PLANS READY

Plans have been prepared by S. Charles Lee for the erection of a two-story brick store and apartment building at Santa Monica boulevard and Myra street for Troyer Brothers. The structure will contain five stores, and apartments above.

THEATER IS TO BE BUILT AT VISALIA

Golden State Concern to Erect Structure at Cost of $250,000

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

VISALIA, Oct. 31.—Visalia is to have a $250,000 theater building erected on a $25,000 site, according to announcement made recently by Manager Harry Seipel of the Theater Visalia.

This new playhouse is to be erected by the Golden State Theaters, Inc., which will add another pleasing establishment to its string of thirty-two theaters throughout Northern California. The Golden State Theatrical Realty Corporation acted for the Golden State concern in the deal, which involved purchase of the present Theater Visalia and purchase of Masonic property on Locust and Acequia streets. It is understood that the concern also intends to operate the Theater Visalia.

Plans for the new building are said to be in keeping with modern playhouses of the State, and call for the finest theater between Los Angeles and Oakland. It will have a seating capacity of 1700. Vaudeville will be featured three nights a week under the present program.

The house is expected to be of such size as to accommodate traveling road shows.

The Golden State Theaters, Inc., are now constructing a playhouse in Fresno and will soon start work on the new theater in Tulare, which will have a seating capacity of 1465.

Contracts for Steel Work on Hospital Let

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

SANTA BARBARA, Oct. 31.—Contract for the steel work on the new County Hospital Building, which will replace the concrete structure damaged in the earthquake of June 29, has been awarded to the Llewellyn Iron Works of Los Angeles, the county board of supervisors announced today. Work is to be started at once.

The board of supervisors voted unanimously in favor of a steel frame shock-proof building, declaring the fullest protection should be given to hospital patients. The St. Francis Hospital, another concrete structure damaged in the earthquake, will also be converted into a steel frame building, assuring shock-proof structures to both institutions.

Firm Reports Good Activity; Sales Total Big

Burton & Co. yesterday reported the sale of three pieces of property for a total of $105,000 in transactions handled by A. W. Crosby and Paul Bullock of the income properties department.

An eight-unit bungalow court at 1311-19 1-2 Tamarind avenue, Hollywood, was sold to D. Jay Butts for $40,000. The lot is 100x130 feet.

A business lot, 110x150 feet, on Pasadena avenue between Avenue 60 and Avenue 61, was sold to C. W. Moody for $40,000.

Angela Esteve paid $25,000 for a six-unit bungalow court on a lot 55x150 feet at the southeast corner of Fountain and Wilton avenues.

SHOWHOUSE FOR TULARE IS PLANNED

Work on Structure Expected to Start Within Next Three Weeks

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

TULARE, Oct. 31.—Final draft of the architect's plans for the new Tulare Theater is being completed in San Francisco and construction operations are expected to start within two or three weeks, according to Robert A. Hazel, manager of the local theater, and M. Naify and William Nasser, representatives of the theater interests.

The new building is to be erected on a site formerly owned by the Masonic Lodge on the corner of Tulare and "L" streets. Plans call for a structure of more than $160,000, with seating capacity of almost 1500. The Moorish design will be favored in architecture.

T. F. Pflueger, architect of the new Pacific Gas and Electric Building in San Francisco, the largest building in the Bay City, and designer of the Castro Theater and the new theater on Polk street in San Francisco, is drawing the plans for the new building here.

Besides the playhouse itself, plans call for a series of stores facing Tulare street, opening into an arcade court, and a number of offices and conference rooms in the upper story. Upholstered seats, a mezzanine floor, and balcony, a glass-inclosed room for mothers with fretting children, retiring rooms and smoking-rooms are some of the conveniences of the new building.

SAN JOAQUIN COTTON BIG CROP VALUE

Ushers in New Development Era, Declares Head of Local Brick Company

Cotton has conquered a new principality in the San Joaquin Valley, and a new era of development, coupled with a great deal of construction work, impends there, according to Richard D. Hatton, vice-president and general manager of the Los Angeles Pressed Brick Company, who returned recently from an inspection tour.

Improved business conditions in the valley will be directly reflected by conditions among Southern California manufacturers, Mr. Hatton said. When the cotton boom began in Arizona, his company shipped trainloads of hollow building tile there for the construction of gin mills, warehouses, settlement houses and other structures, he declared.

He forecast a strong demand for this material throughout the San Joaquin Valley, upon the receipt of money for this year's crops by the farmers.

Grapes, cotton and figs all made successful crops this year, Mr. Hatton said. Cotton is being planted between the rows of grapes eliminating the hazard of a single crop.

Equipment for Tulare Sewer to be Bought

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

TULARE, Oct. 31.—Orders to purchase equipment to be used in improvement work on the city streets and plans to extend the present sewer system were outstanding matters of business at a recent meeting of the City Council.

Purchase of a road machine and a tractor was authorized, this equipment to be used in improving the surface of the unpaved streets. This purchase is made possible by the favorable condition of the city finances.

Extensions to complete the city sewer systems are planned for the near future, City Manager Andrews being ordered to prepare plans and specifications to augment the present system so as to provide sewer lines for all parts of the city.

PLANS NORTHERN COTTON RANCH

Grower Buys Madera County Acreage at $250,000

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

FRESNO, Oct. 31.—Purchase of 3000 acres of Madera county land for a consideration of approximately $250,000 and plans for planting it to cotton next year, were announced here today by L. F. Giffen, grower and ginner.

The land lies immediately north of Fresno River in Madera county and has been planted to grain by the former owner, J. Walter Schmitz, one of the county's largest land owners.

Governors of Board Will be Dinner Guests

Members of the Board of Governors of the Los Angeles Realty Board will be guests at a dinner to be tendered them Friday evening, November 6 by William C. Keim at his home in Coldwater Canyon, Beverly Hills.

The board which meets every other week at the Clark Hotel will eliminate its next meeting and will transact its business at the dinner meeting at the Keim home. Mr. Keim is a member of the governing body.

JAIL CONTRACT LET

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE]

ALHAMBRA, Oct. 31.—A contract to furnish the steel work for the new city jail was awarded this week to Fries & Son Steel Construction company of Covington, Ky. The bid of this firm, $5573, was the lowest of three submitted. Rapid progress is being made in the city jail construction. The general contractor is R. Westcott company of Alhambra and Los Angeles.

LANKERSHIM STRUCTURE

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE]

LANKERSHIM, Oct. 31.—The new five-story building of Penfield & Forsyth at Lankershim Boulevard and Magnolia is rapidly being completed. The decorative cement front gives an attractive appearance to the structure. It is stated the five stores will be ready for occupancy by the middle of next week.

Plan One-Story Salesroom on South Figueroa

Construction of a one-story and basement, Class C building at Figueroa and Twenty-seventh street for Roy Donley, Inc., lessee, was reported by the W. Ross Campbell Company, business and industrial property brokers.

The move from the present quarters of the organization at 1100 Santa Fe avenue, was made necessary by the increased demand for an automobile covering for which the Donley firm is Pacific Coast agent.

The new building, which will be ready for occupancy in about thirty days, represents a high-class sales and showroom in one of the most desirable automobile districts in the city. U. S. Wyatt, Jr., of the W. Ross Campbell Company, represented both Anna B. Eisen, the owner, and Roy L. Donley, Inc., in the transaction.

Thirty-three Register for Realty Course

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE]

INGLEWOOD, Oct. 31.—A class of thirty-three has been organized by the Inglewood Realty Board to take the real estate educational course, with Frank D. Parent, past-president of the organization, as the instructor. The class will meet every Monday evening in the Central Grammar School for twenty-six weeks.

Indications are according to Lee S. Hake, president of the board, that there will be many more entries in the class within the next week or two. Many who have already joined are not members of the board, or even engaged in the real estate business, but who are glad to embrace this opportunity for obtaining valuable knowledge of real estate law and other matters vital to property owners.

TULARE STORE OPENS

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

TULARE, Oct. 24.—E. M. Lipson has opened a new men's furnishing shop in the Tulare Hotel Building at North K and West Tulare streets. Lipson has been in this line of business for twenty years, at one time acting as manager of twelve establishments located in Montana, Idaho and Utah.

Many new banks are being formed in small towns of Norway to replace those that were swept away by the financial depression.

Now made in Los Angeles better SOUND DEADENER that costs you 25% less!

SOUND-PROOF WALLS are just as necessary in modern homes as plumbing and heating. Now you can get a Sound-Deadener and Plaster Base combined for 25% to 75% less than any other sound insulating material on the market! And this combined product—Bishopric Insulating Base—kills sound better than other materials commonly used for insulation.

These statements are startling—but absolutely true! Tests prove it! Back East Bishopric Insulating Base has been used for eighteen years. Now the Los Angeles factory is producing this famous insulation at a cost to you that is far below the price of ordinary sound deadeners.

Prof. Knudsen's Amazing Tests Prove Bishopric Insulating Base Deadens Sound Better Than 7 Other Sound Insulators!

Prof. Vern O. Knudsen, of the University of California, Southern Branch, a National authority on sound deadening, has made careful scientific laboratory tests which absolutely prove that Bishopric Insulating Base has greater sound-deadening value than seven other widely used insulating materials which were subjected to the same tests.

Yet this superior sound-deadener sells for less! And because it has the same mechanical key as standard Bishopric Base it also grips the plaster to the walls. You save the cost of lath or plaster backing.

GIRARD GOLF LINKS OPEN

New Home Finished, Children's Playground and First Nine Holes of Course Completed

Three big development features this week marked an epoch in the history of Girard, in the San Fernando Valley. The new home of the Girard Golf Club was opened on Thursday night with a banquet by the Ventura Boulevard Chamber of Commerce; the first nine holes of the eighteen-hole golf course was opened to the members and their guests on Sunday; and two-acre children's playground was dedicated to the use of the youngsters of Girard on Friday.

In the dedication of these three recreational facilities to the use of the people of Girard, its founder, Victor Girard, sees an exemplification of a new era in the upbuilding of towns and communities. He believes that it is just as important, or more so, to provide for the contentment and happiness of residents as it is to secure industrial and commercial advantages.

Mr. Girard holds that business will follow the people and that any community that has residential excellencies and provides comfort for its citizens will attract more home-seekers, and consequently commercial facilities will of necessity follow to provide for them.

One of his first concerns, therefore, in laying out the town of Girard was to provide for recreation and civic beauties. He contends that not only the older folks of such a residential suburb as Girard need the recreational facilities, but that to make homes happy for the children they should have especial attention.

The large playgrounds provided and equipped for use is the result of this inspiration, and its dedication to the children was a ceremony attended by many mothers and visitors.

FURNITURE FIRM GETS NEW HOME

Other Inglewood Concerns Select Business Locations With Larger Quarters

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE]

INGLEWOOD, Oct. 31.—Inglewood's oldest furniture firm, the Inglewood Furniture Company, announces that it will observe its eighteenth anniversary November 1 by moving across the street from their present location on North Market street into the new $100,000 building just completed for the W. G. Brown Corporation. The furniture concern has taken over the entire building, nearly three times the space they at present occupy, and will, said Harry Van Beaver, president of the company, make it the finest furniture store in Southern California, outside of the metropolis.

The beautiful new $50,000 L. C. Myer Building adjoining the furniture concern, was opened recently. The ground floor is occupied by R. A. Watson & Co., pioneer dry-goods merchant of the Centinela Valley. Other enterprises in the new structure gave programs and held open house, including the Dana's Candy Shop and the Anna Heller Dancing Studios, while the Modern Studio of the Dance, conducted by Morgan Honeycutt, from the Cinderella Roof, Los Angeles, will open there next week.

Another new enterprise on North Market street is Coast House Furnishing Company, with J. E. Barnes as manager. On Commercial street the H. N. Clarey grocery and the Halpin's Brownbilt Shoe Store, just opened.

H. K. Tompkins, who recently came here from Minneapolis, has purchased the Granada Sweet Shoppe from George E. Longan and will carry on this business on a larger scale.

Contract for Alhambra Road Job is Awarded

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE]

ALHAMBRA, Oct. 31.—Contract for paving Marguerita avenue from Alhambra road to Main street has been awarded to the Hall-Johnson company of this city. The same concern secured the Main-street paving job recently. Specifications call for five inches of asphaltic-concrete pavement.

The successful bidder figured the cost at $18,191.50. Only three bids were filed with the city for the work.

Another contract for city work awarded by the commissioners this week was for the steel construction in the new City Jail. The lowest bid ($5761, was submitted by Fries & Son Steel Construction and Engineering Company of Covington, Ky.

Assessment Figures Show Redlands Gain

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

REDLANDS, Oct. 31.—Comparative figures from the assessment roll for Redlands since 1889 show that Redlands has made steady growth, but is making more rapid strides now.

In 1889 the valuation was $1,965,688. In 1895 it increased to $2,698,602. In 1900 it had increased to $3,656,097. In 1905 it had increased to $6,433,164. In 1910 it had increased to $8,005,064. In 1915 it had increased to $9,541,980.

In 1920 it had increased to $9,867,778, and this year to $14,944,850.

Begin Moving Postal Records to New Office

Records and some of the equipment of the Hollywood postoffice are being removed from the present location on Highland avenue to the new $400,000 postoffice building on Vine street, near Hollywood Boulevard, where it will open for business tomorrow morning.

The postoffice accommodations were leased by the government from the Federal Building Company, after that concern had complied with advertised specifications calling for the location of the new postoffice in the immediate vicvinity of the center of Hollywood.

TERMINAL BLOCK PLAN IS ALTERED

Height-Limit Structure in Hollywood to Have Unique Upper Floor Construction

With the new Hollywood Terminal Building almost at the height-limit stage in construction, plans to complete the thirteenth and fourteenth floors were changed yesterday, according to announcement by the contractor, William Simpson Construction Company, which will make it one of the most unique of its kind in this section of the country.

The interior columns on the fourteenth floor are to be omitted, according to the announcement, and instead ten thirty-inch girders, fifty-two feet across, will carry the roof. These girders will be of steel. The fourteenth story, the contractor declared, will be supported through a cantilever construction by columns on the thirteenth floor, there being no weight from the fourteenth floor on the walls. The roof will be carried by the outside walls.

The Hollywood Terminal Building, a C. E. Toberman development, will be the tallest building in Los Angeles when completed, it is said. Plans calling for a height-limit structure with a radio broadcasting station on top. It is going up at Highland avenue and Santa Monica Boulevard.

SELLING IS SUBJECT OF REALTY MAN

Mason Case Explains Best Methods at Monthly Meeting of Eagle Rock Board

"Salesmanship" was the subject of an address by Mason Case, member of the Los Angeles Realty Board's governing body, at the regular monthly meeting of the Eagle Rock division of the board, held at the Green Frog Inn at Eagle Rock Friday noon.

Case told the realty men that the principal fault with salesmen is that they often talk themselves into a sale and then instead of getting the signature on the dotted line talk themselves out of the deal.

He urged ethical, straight-forward business methods as the only course to pursue to obtain repeat customers and dealt with many phases of successful real estate salesmanship.

H. G. Warren, chairman of the division, presided at the meeting, which was attended by a large majority of the members of the organization.

Santa Ana May Hire Scout to Get Industries

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

SANTA ANA, Oct. 31.—Employment of a competent scout to remain in Los Angeles and keep in touch with industrial manufacturers looking for new factory locations, is the best method for securing substantial and self-supporting manufacturing enterprises for this district, in the opinion of the members of the industrial contact committee of the Santa Ana Chamber of Commerce, who took the matter up this week.

The committee is a new one and has but recently been added to the list of standing committees of the chamber. The members are A. B. Rouselle, John Knox, E. L. Construction of Garage to be Innovation

An innovation in garage construction is represented in a $60,000 structure at the northwest corner of Brooklyn avenue and Ganahl street, ground for which was broken recently and which it is proposed to have ready for occupancy within a few months.

According to Morton Snyder, who will be interested in the operation of the garage, the usual repair pits will be elimnated entirely with the installation of electric lifting hoists, and an air-suction ventilation system will be provided.

Nine different colors in brick, manufactured by the Pacific Clay Products Company, are being used in the walls of the building which will be one-story high. The plans call for a system which will do away with artificial lighting in the repair shop, it was announced. Lazar & Sons Construction Company is the contractor.

SANTA BARBARA STORE

Plans are being prepared by C. K. Denman and William A. Edwards, associated, for a four-story reinforced concrete store and hotel building at State and Haley streets, Santa Barbara, for J. H. Fast. The structure will cost $200,000 and will contain eleven stores and 102 rooms with 50 per cent baths.

CLUBHOUSE PLANNED

Plans have been been prepared for the erection of a frame clubhouse on Manchester avenue beteen Western avenue and Inglewood for the Potrero Country Club by Hunt and Burns.

"A Million From Eggs" ——at Fontana!

Fontana's egg income is over a million dollars this year.

A total of 200,000 Fontana strain white leghorns, laying in 200 Fontana poultry plants, are bringing this amount, in gross cash, into the community.

LADY FONTANA II
New World Champion Hen,
572 Eggs in 24 Months

This sum is received in 52 installments. In other words, every Fontana Plan poultryman gets his check for his eggs each week. In return, he pays cash for his feed and other bills.

This $1,000,000 is "liquid money," in constant circulation.

"Nearly $200,000 in Net Profits"

Out of this huge total, between $150,000 and $200,000 will remain in the hands of Fontana poultrymen as net profits.

This is their return for work and investment during the year.

"Income from Fontana Fruit"

E. J. HAUSER,
Nationally Known Poultry Expert

Practically every poultryman at Fontana has his home and chicken unit constructed in a grove or vineyard. Thus he derives an additional income, combining the two to his advantage.

During the past six months, a total of 334 families who investigated our plan of combined fruit and poultry raising purchased at Fontana. They were convinced of the intrinsic value and worth of what we offered. They came out to Fontana to live.

To Get the Facts—

Call at any of our offices, drive out to Fontana, or just send us the attached coupon.

"See Our 5-Reel Picture"

For the benefit of hundreds of interested people, a new 5-reel picture about Fontana and the Fontana Plan of combined fruit and poultry raising has just been completed.

It was first shown to the public last Wednesday evening. You are invited to see it, any Wednesday evening at 7:30 o'clock at our main Los Angeles Office, 631 South Spring Street, Suite 600.

"Never Such Values"

Our land prices are much lower and our terms the easiest for the value we give—

Orange and Grapefruit Groves..... .....$850 to $1250 per acre
Vineyards .....$550 to $650 per acre
Walnut Orchards.....$550 to $600 per acre

BUILDERS RAP DAY LABOR USE

Contractors Oppose Method in Federal Work

Urge National Prohibitive Laws be Passed

Matter to be Brought Up in Congress

The outstanding result of the semiannual meeting of the directors and advisory board of the Associated General Contractors of America, held in Dallas, Tex., October 5, 6 and 7, was the decision to secure introduction and passage of a bill designed to limit the amount of work, which may be undertaken by any Federal government agency by day labor, is the word brought back by Melville Dozier, Jr., manager of the local chapter, who represented California contractors at the conference.

The contractors' association, through the national body, will place the matter before Congress when it convenes in December. It is hoped to get national legislation and then to work for similar legislation affecting States, counties and municipalities, as well as other political subdivisions.

At the last State Assembly a bill known as the Day Labor Cost Publicity Law Bill was passed. This bill was designed to eliminate day labor, in so far as possible. It provides for an accurate cost accounting system to be kept by the engineers of any political subdivision, where the work is in excess of $5000 and handled as day labor work.

The bill also provides that within sixty days from the completion of any such work a statement of actual cost of all labor, materials, rental repairs, compensation and other insurances, transportation of labor equipment and materials, engineering or architectural services, including the services of any public employees in connection with such work shall be filed in the office of the County Clerk, subject to inspection by the public.

The estimate of cost and the names of bidders with prices bid must accompany the statement.

New Theater is Announced for Hawthorne

D. Rector of the Chotiner Theaters, Inc., announces arrangements have been completed to build a first-class theater at Hawthorne.

It will contain five stores and will be erected by William McNeil of the Hopkins-McNeil Investment Company. The building completed and equipped will entail an expenditure of $150,000.

The Chotiner Theaters, Inc., are now operating several suburban theaters. The Roosevelt Theater at Eighth and Vermont, was the first theater erected by this well-known theater-operating company. They have also recently completed the Ravena Theater at Vermont and Beverly Boulevard, considered one of the most beautiful neighborhood theaters in Los Angeles.

Both theaters will be under the management of D. Rector, present owner of the Hawthorne Theater, and under direction of Chotiner Theaters, Inc.

HUNTINGTON PARK PLANT EXPANDING

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE]

HUNTINGTON PARK, Oct. 31. The Byron-Jackson Pump Company, at 2150 East Slauson avenue, has started the erection of a new warehouse, which, in dimensions, will be 79 by 140 feet when completed. The new structure will be built of brick and galvanized iron and will cost around $10,000.

BUYS HOME; SHIPS IT TO MISSISSIPPI

Eastern Man Discovers He Can Buy More Economically in Los Angeles

Within one hour after his arrival in Los Angeles, E. L. Egan had placed an order with the Pacific Ready-Cut Homes, Inc., for materials for a five-room stucco home, an exact duplicate of one of the houses on the firm's local exhibition grounds, and the shipment will be made this week to Gulfport, Miss.

The purchaser has made many trips to California and has been deeply impressed with the beauty of the architecture and the low cost of materials prevailing in Southern California. According to officials of the local building company, he expects to build the structure in Gulfport, and use it for an exhibition house and office and plans to develop orders for these homes.

This is interesting in view of the fact that Gulfport is within a few miles of one of the largest southern pine forests in the United States and it would naturally be supposed that lumber would be much cheaper in Mississippi than if purchased in Los Angeles and shipped across the continent.

In comparing costs of Los Angeles materials with those prevailing in Mississippi, Egan said that he can purchase materials here, pay the freight and build more economically and at the same time offer all the architectural features that have made California homes famous throughout the world.

In addition to the initial purchase of this home he has ordered materials for a double garage and is leaving for Mississippi next week fully conversant with all of the sales features of Pacific homes, according to W. P. Butte, president of the firm.

Bowling Alley Being Rushed to Completion

What promises to be one of the best equipped bowling alleys west of Chicago is now being rapidly rushed to completion for the opening night, November 7, when the Bimini Bowling Academy, according to Vincent R. Hayes, general manager, will be the scene of an open sweepstakes for men and women on its sixteen alleys.

According to Hayes the cost of the equipment and interior decoration will approximate $100,000. Each alley has an individual return avoiding confusion from adjoining alleys. There are special accommodation benches for the players equipped with individual clothes hangers and compartments for shoes and packages.

NICARAGUA BIDS FOR COMMERCE

Offers Many Opportunites, Writer Declares

Former Long Beach Resident Tells of Country

Cites Commodity Prices in Southern City

Great opportunity for manufacturing and trade exists in Nicaragua, the trade extension department of the Chamber of Commerce was informed yesterday in a letter received from a former Long Beach woman who has spent some time in the southern country.

Prices on many commodities are out of all proportion to the levels to which they could be brought by an intelligent invasion of industry, she declares, citing as instances of present prices, soda crackers at $1 a pound, cookies at $1.50 a pound and ham at $1 a pound.

England has a practical control o Tthe canned goods market at the present time, she says, due to a policy of cheap selling and easy credit.

Fruits which could be made to yield handsome profits if conserved by canning now rot on the ground, the correspondent says, adding "We also need some expert canner for vegetables, tomatoes, etc."

Production costs at present standards would be extremely reasonable, the letter states, with labor at 20 cents and 30 cents a day, and land, building and wood in a like proportionate sum.

"I know of a farm of 700 acres, with all kinds of hardwoods, houses, wells, etc., with 300 acres under cultivation, located about one-half hour from the capital on the lake of Managua, which can be bought for $2000, $1000 cash and the balance within two years," she writes for example.

Also there is a wonderful opening for an American style hotel, the writer says, which could be conducted with metropolitan methods of dinner dances and similar fetes.

In addition to the potentialities of the fruit and canning business, there are many others, she says, such as white starch made from the yucca, chillies that are hotter than anything known in this country, vegetable coloring, ginger, fish, shrimp and oyster canning, silk manufacturing, and the making of soap from alligator pears.

Subdividers Purchase Big Ocean Frontage

Messrs. W. A. Dunn and William Lingenbrink have purchased eighty-five acres of land near Hueneme. The price paid was $85,000 cash. The property has over a mile of ocean frontage with an average depth of 750 feet. It is all sand. The property is reached via the new coast highway now building north from Santa Monica.

Dunn and Lingenbrink plotted Hollywood Beach, which was sold out last summer. About sixty-five cottages have been built there. The new tract has been named Silver Strand and will at once be subdivided into beach lots.

Homesite Area Getting Many New Dwellings

Present building activities in Flintridge include the palatial homes of Forrest Q. Stanton, Carl F. Johnson and Mrs. H. L. Winters, each of which will have fifteen rooms and several smaller houses of the bungalow type.

In the latter group is the home of Lester E. Purer, who recently broke ground on his lot on Central Place to build an attractive colonial style bungalow of his own design.

W. Stutfield Banks recently sold his former home to James Cruse and is erecting a new one on Haroid Way for occupancy. It is being built by J. F. Hare on a hillside location and arrangements are being made so that more rooms can be added on the lower level at any time this might be desired. The house, which is nearing completion, is of the Spanish type in cement-tile construction.

HOUSE WORK PROGRESSING

Work on the foundation of the house and the concrete base for the wall which is to surround the new home which Carl F. Johnson is erecting in Flintridge on Meadowgrove avenue near the Flintridge Country Club is almost completed. John H. Simpson has the general contract for the residence.

Compton Gets New, Modern Business Block

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE]

COMPTON, Oct. 31.—One of the finest and largest buildings yet erected in Compton has been completed by Harry A. Chaffee at the southwest corner of Alameda boulevard and Main street. The Seller's Department Store has leased the storeroom facing on Main and and institutions will occupy the second floor.

The structure fronts on both Main and Palm streets, and entrance to both floors is afforded from either street.

Construction is entirely of brick, the ornamentation being of art stone in conventional classic design.

GETS COMMUNITY HALL

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE]

HOME GARDENS, Oct. 24.—The Tweedy School district is to have a community hall, plans having already been approved. The new building will be one-story in height, and will cover a ground space of 30 x 75 feet. It will contain a large hall, a stage and a kitchen. The building will be constructed at a small cost, it is thought, as the labor is to be donated.

BIG DEMAND FOR LAGUNA BEACH LOTS

Purchase of Water-Bearing Land Creates Brisk Market for Realty

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE]

SANTA ANA, Oct. 31.—Announcement of the purchase of twenty acres of water-bearing land by the Laguna Beach Water Board has created a stir in building circles in Laguna Beach and contractors are busy figuring on residences. It is estimated that more than 100 new houses will be built in Laguna Beach this winter.

Nearly all improved property has been withdrawn from the market, but vacant property is selling more briskly than it ever has in the history of the town. Ocean front and hill property is in the greatest demand. The number of Santa Ana people purchasing property at Laguna Beach is on the increase, according to realty firms.

Talk has been revived of a hotel movement. At least two syndicates are said to be negotiating for hotel sites. The contracts for land will be based on the passage of the water bonds to be held in December.

There has been an unusual real estate and building activity at the upper end of Arch Beach. Florence E. Townsend has purchased twenty-five lots from the Skidmore brothers and has sold eighteen lots to various parties of the Pacific View and Alta Mar Vista tracts. Ten of the purchasers have declared their intention of building. Five houses are in the course of construction and six have been completed recently in subdivisions at the south end of town.

One Laguna Beach realty firm has sold $250,000 worth of property since the formation of the water district last May. Another firm has passed the $150,000 mark in sales. The Yoch estate is improving the property at Ocean avenue and Coast Boulevard. Three stores will face on the boulevard.

Realty Board Favors Confab at Beach City

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE]

HUNTINGTON PARK, Oct. 31. The Huntington Park Realty Board has gone on record as favoring the 1927 realty convention of California being held at Santa Monica.

There was a contest on at Fresno during the week, on the convention early this month, in which both Long Beach and Santa Monica were candidate cities, and it is understood that Long Beach has signified its intention of assisting Santa Monica in securing the 1927 annual meeting.

The 1926 convention is to be held at Monterey.

MERGER OF FOUNDRIES ANNOUNCED

Los Angeles and Pasadena Plants Work to be Carried on at Wilmington

Consolidation of the Los Angeles and Pasadena foundries of the Ward Heater Company at the Wilmington plant of that concern was started yesterday as the first move in an expansion program directed towards greater production and higher efficiency.

At the same time the company started the installation of two electroplating tanks, operated by twenty horsepower motors, which have a combined capacity of 500 gas pipeless floor furnaces.

Another crew of men was engaged in setting up the twenty-eight-ton cupola, which arrived here recently from Chicago on two freight cars. It has a capacity of eighteen tons of molten metal per hour.

Impending cold weather has put a serious strain on the capacity of the plant, according to Samuel Sprout, president, and this capacity is being incn srdeETHARA ity is being increased as rapidly as possible.

A carload shipment of 380 furnaces was made yesterday to Billings, Mont. The contract for heating the recently completed Haven M. E. Church at Seventy-fifth street and Normandie avenue was awarded the concern and installation is now being made.

Plaster Lath Firm Making Plant Larger

The Pastold Products Company started work yesterday on an addition to its plant at Twenty-fifth street and Downey Road, which will double the manufacturing capacity of the gypsum-centered plaster-lath department.

To meet the increasing demand for its product, the company for its product, the company has a galvanized steel building 118 by 250 feet in size, it was announced by Robert Greenleaf, vice-president.

The structure will be built by the company itself. The new building constitutes the second unit of the rapidly growing factory.

Beverly Hills' first business arcade building went under construction this week.

When complete it will circle the entire business block at the corner of Beverly Drive and Santa Monica Boulevard, with another entrance on Santa Monica Boulevard.

Stanley S. Anderson is the owner.

The first unit covers a site 150 feet deep with fifty feet fronting on Beverly Drive. This choice business site is valued at approximately $50,000 at the present time and the total investment will represent about $110,000. W. Asa Hudson, architect of Beverly Hills, has prepared the plan.

BUILDERS BUSILY ENGAGED

Associated General Contractors Report New Projects Under Way in Los Angeles and Vicinity

A number of contracts awarded during the past week showed substantial gain over the second week of the month. The most important project was a group of buildings for the Orphans' Home at Altadena which will involve expenditures in excess of $200,000, according to the Southern California chapter, Associated General Contractors of America. Some of the activities of the association for the past week follow:

The Orndorff Construction Company has been awarded a contract for a group of buildings, including main building, hospital, four dormitories and boiler house and laundry room, for the Boys' and Girls' Aid Society at Altadena. Plans for the structure were prepared by Myron Hunt, and when completed, the buildings will represent an expenditure of about $200,000.

A contract has been awarded by the City of Long Beach to the Beswick Construction Company at $32,624 for a one-story brick shop building on Peterson avenue, between Fourteenth and Fifteenth streets, Long Beach.

The city of South Pasadena has awarded two contracts to the Hall-Johnson Company for street paving work in South Pasadena. One contract involving an expenditure of $28,914 provides for the paving of Grand avenue from Mission to Columbia street, and the other contract involving $11,328 will provide for paving of Camden Court, Camden avenue and Court street.

The Griffith Company has been awarded a contract by the city of Claremont for paving work involving 605,000 square feet of four-inch asphalt concrete paving, grading and curbs.

The United States Veterans' Bureau, Washington, D. C., has awarded a contract to the North Pacific Construction Company for a pump house involving an expenditure of $4960 at the Veterans' Hospital, San Fernando. The Thomas Haverty Company has also been awarded the pipe-line contract in connection with this work at $4075.

Hodge & McMackin have been awarded a contract for converting a two-story garage building at 1042 South Grand avenue into a store and lodge building for Frank J. Thomas. Work will include new store fronts, changing partitions and interior finish and will involve a expenditure of $15,000.

A contract has been awarded to the William Simpson Construction Company for the Hollywood Chamber of Commerce Building, opposite the Hollywood Athletic Club. Plans for the structure, estimated to cost $50,000, were prepared by Morgan, Walls & Clements.

The contract for the erection of a two-story addition to the machine shop at 1726 East Washington street for H. E. Dillon, has been awarded to J. A. Crook at $4460.

Work will be started soon by the Northland Construction Company, who have been awarded the general contract for the erection of a two-story, ten-room, duplex dwelling on Mansfield avenue for Frank E. and Lulu P. Thompson. The structure is estimated to cost $10,000.

The Community Hotel Corporation has awarded a contract to the Thomas L. Otis Company at $171,500, for the erection of a three-story and mezzanine floor, reinforced concrete hotel building at Brawley. The structure will contain eighty-six rooms with 100 per cent baths, stores, lobby, ballroom and dining room.

Los Angeles county has awarded a contract to the Southwest Paving Company at $5262 for improving Leffingwell Road between Colima Road and 675 feet east.

The Herbert M. Baruch Corporation has been awarded a contract at $24,000 for sections A and B of alterations and remodeling of two-story building at 713-15 South Flower street for the Wetherby-Kaiser Shoe Company. The same company has also been awarded a contract at $18,372 for erecting a shop building at the Central Junior High School site. Plans for this structure were prepared by Paul C. Pape.

The W. E. Kier Construction Company, San Diego general contractors, has been awarded a contract by the Palomar Laundries, Inc., for erecting a two-story brick building at India and Kettner streets. The structure will be of brick and stucco exterior construction.

The city of Alhambra has awarded a contract to the Hall-Johnson Company for improving Marguerita avenue, Alhambra, at a cost of $18,191. The work includes walk, curb, gutter, asphalt concrete paving.

The Griffith Company has been awarded a contract at $42,552.38 by the city of Santa Monica for improving Eighteenth street between Central avenue and Dewey street, Santa Monica with concrete paving, asphalt concrete paving, curbs, walks and water system.

Refused admission to the bricklayers' union, John Eldred, a bricklayer's helper, built his own home at Spratton, Eng., this year, laying 26,000 bricks at night.

Building With Equipment Represents Investment of $1,000,000

The Mack-International Motor Truck Building, just completed by the John M. Cooper Organization, at Twentieth and Alameda streets, represents an investment, with equipment, of $1,000,000.

This building has seven and one-half acres of floor space and one section is 650 feet long. Extreme care has been taken in the lighting of this mammoth plant. No photograph could be obtained of the exterior of this building that conveyed any idea of its great size, so the interior of one wing was photographed.

The building is in two sections, one being of Class A construction, two stories and basement, the other section being Class C.

The Mack Truck Building is one of the largest and finest structures of its kind in the country and was built to care for the rapidly expanding business of this well-known concern.

New Design Refuse Cans Gaining Favor

More than 1000 sanitary refuse receptacles, manufactured by William L. Allen, have been installed in Los Angeles homes during the past few weeks and orders for several hundred more of the new devices for installation in new houses have just been received, according to A. W. Poole of the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce.

The receptacles are built-in under the back part of the kitchen sink drainboard, are automatically controlled and do away with the unsightly garbage can, according to Poole. The device is designed to provide a convenient and sanitary method of disposig of kitchen refuse, as it is made.

Express Firm Buys Site on Hewitt Street

The Service Motor Express, located for many years at 352 Towne avenue, will soon occupy new quarters at 448-456 South Hewitt street, according to the J. W. Lewis Company, which reports having sold a large parcel of land to this company at that location.

The Service Motor Express is owned by Louis T. Fletcher and E. Tremble, and is engaged in motor truck transportation; they started on a small scale ten years ago and now are operating a large fleet of motor trucks between Los Angeles and points in San Bernardino and Orange counties; they also make trips between Los Angeles and points in the Santa Monica Bay district.

INGLEWOOD TO GET NEW PLANT

Contract Let to Construct Fictile Factory

Will Manufacture Porcelain Specialties

First Unit to Have Large Initial Capacity

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE]

INGLEWOOD, Oct. 31. — The signing of a contract this week to build a kiln and factory with 2500 square feet of floor space signalizes the entry of a pioneer industry into Southern California, and, in fact, the entire United States, it is believed. The contract was signed by H. F. Coors, formerly of Golden, Colo., a recognized authority on the vitrified clay branch of ceramics, for Inglewood Industries, Inc., which will erect at once the first unit of what is expected in a short time to develop into a very large concern.

The plant will be located on Redondo Boulevard just west of this city in what is known as the Inglewood - Southwest Manufacturing District, along the Santa Fe Railroad.

The manufacture of porcelain specialties, some of which up to this time have been procurable only from Germany, will be carried on here under Mr. Coors's direction. As an instance of the demand for one line only, that of doll heads, the entire product that can be turned out within ninety days after the completion of the first kiln has already been contracted for, according to Col. Thomas H. Jennings, vice-president of Inglewood Industries, Inc.

The first unit of the plant will have a capacity of 30,000 pieces a month and this will be added to as rapidly as circumstances permit.

Inglewood was selected by Mr. Coors as the site for the plant after three and a half years of research and investigation of materials and markets. He has been frequently called upon during this time for authoritative information by the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce and practically all the data in the files of the chamber's research department on the vitrified clay branch of ceramics has been supplied by him.

APARTMENTS STARTED

The Mark A. Viner Co. will start construction immediately on a two-story twenty-room apartment building at 1048 Marne Avenue. The building, which will cost in the neighborhood of $30,000, will contain four apartments and will have oak floors and mahogany trim, and is of brick veneer construction. English manor style architecture. Plans were prepared by West & Northman.

URGE HIGHWAY IMPROVEMENTS

Realizing the drastic need for through highways in the East Side industrial district of Los Angeles, the East Side Organization, working in conjunction with city and county officials and the Chamber of Commerce, has included the improvement of ten important highways in the road-development program it is sponsoring, it was announced yesterday by Fred T. Beaty, president of the association.

They are as follows, he said: East Beverly Boulevard, East Ninth street, Holabird avenue, Slauson avenue, Eastern avenue, Atlantic avenue, Telegraph Road, San Gabriel Boulevard, Manchester and Garfield avenues.

In all instances the road improvements involve paving, widening, straightening and general betterment, and work is under way to some extent on all of the projects.

Regarded as most important of these, Beaty said, is Slauson avenue, which, as proposed, will extend from Alameda street in Los Angeles through Huntington Park, Vernon, Maywood, Rivera, Los Nietos and on to Whittier, thus opening up the longest east and west highway in the county.

Work on the Maywood sector of this road is to start soon. From Telegraph Road to Whittier engineers are rushing surveys. In Huntington Park the work awaits but the completion of the installation of the municipal sewer system in that city and private contracts are being arranged by property owners to pave various other portions of the avenue.

Manufacturers of Brick Unite in Big Merger

The Western Brick Company of Los Angeles has just completed negotiations for the purchase of the Southwestern Brick Company of Long Beach.

As the result of this merger the Western Brick Company now owns plants at both Long Beach and Santa Monica in addition to their main manufacturing plant in this city.

Daily production will aggregate approximately $225,000 bricks.

Firm Here Has Huge Tonnage Steel in Yards

To cope with its increase in business in Arizona and Nevada there has been assembled in one pile in the stock yard of the McClintic-Marshall Company 9,000,000 pounds of steel, which will be sent through the fabricating plant within less than ninety days, according to officials of the company.

This stock of steel is constantly replenished and varies in size from thirty-inch I-beams to the smallest steel rods. The extensive building program in this part of the country is keeping the plant, the largest devoted exclusively to fabrication of steel for buildings and bridges on the Pacific Coast, running almost to its full capacity, it is announced.

Experience
In Face Brick Construction

The photograph shows the east side of Olive Street looking South from Sixth. The arrows point to buildings faced with brick from our kilns. Look down most any street and the story is the same.

DURING the construction of the small brick building as well as the large, questions often arise that can be answered more satisfactorily by men of practical experience in this type of work.

The experience of this company dates back to 1887 and covers every use of face brick, roofing tile, hollow tile and other products of clay. Most of the noteworthy buildings of Los Angeles came from our kilns.

Practical advice and supervision is an important part of our service. It costs you nothing extra.

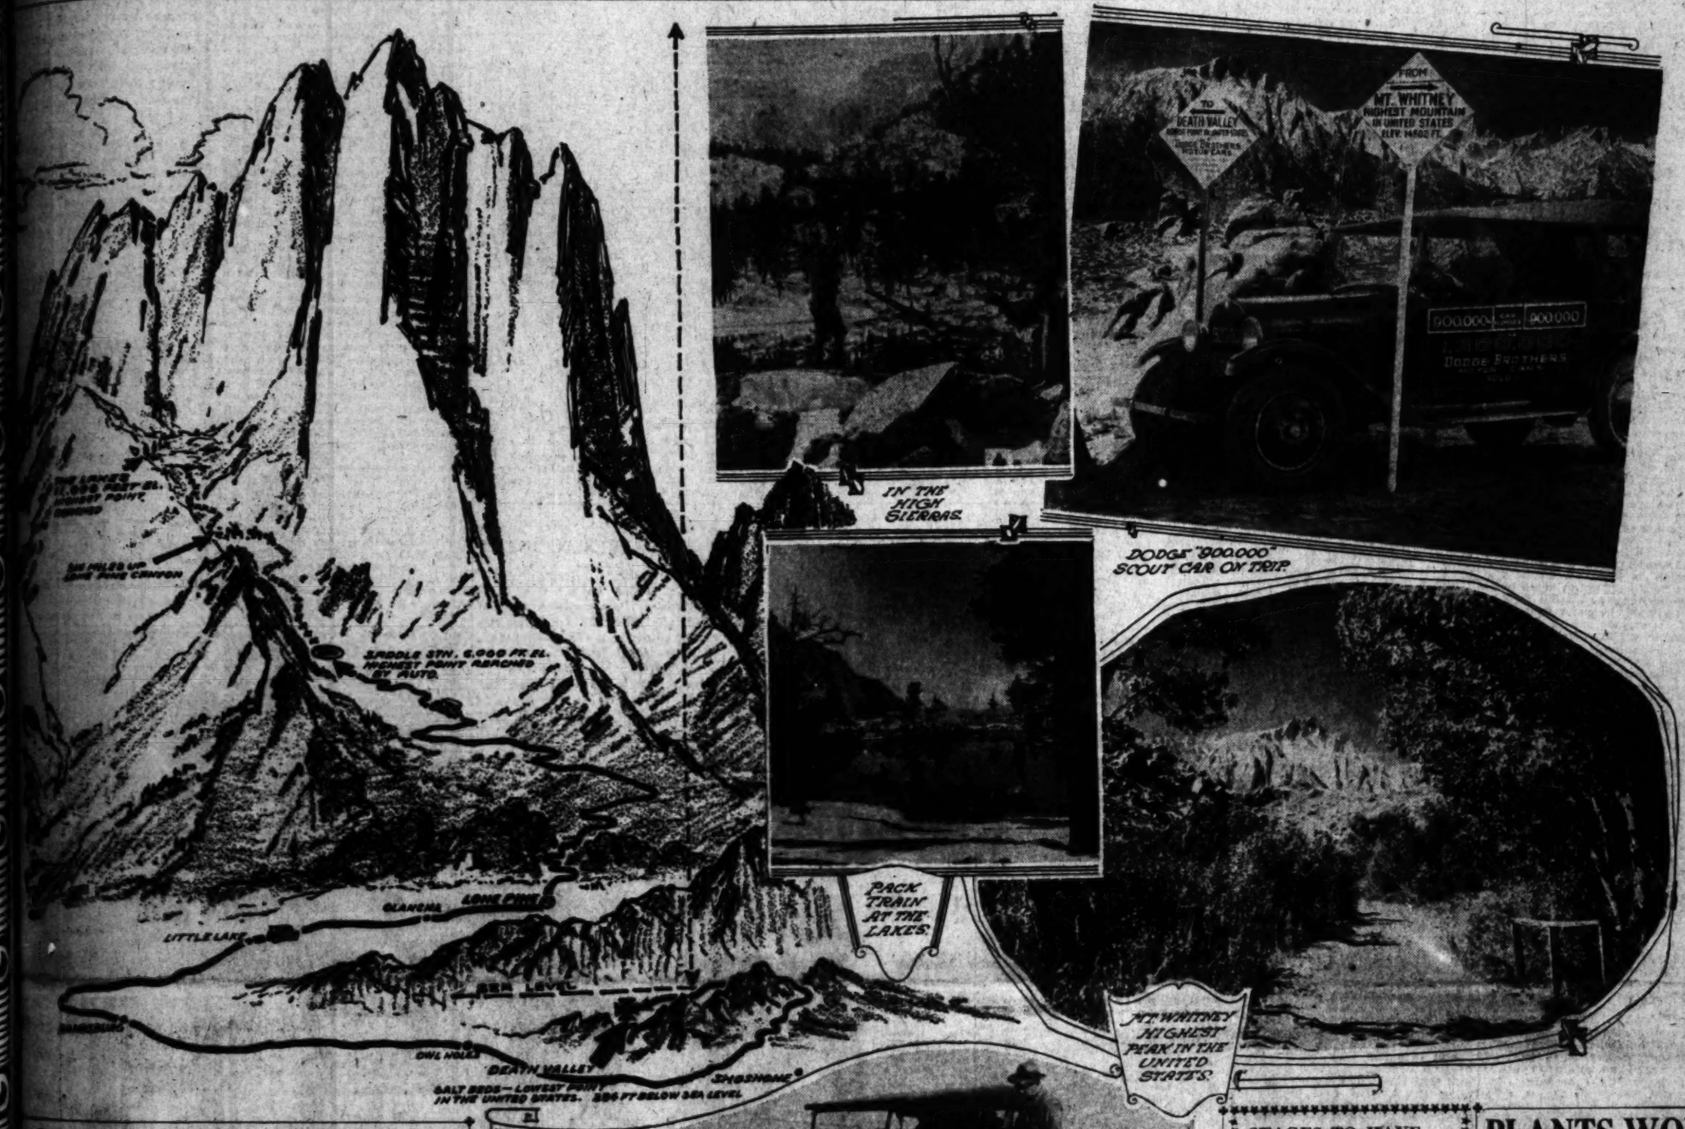
MT. WHITNEY-DEATH VALLEY TOUR REVEALS ADVENTURE'S GLAMOUR



From the Heights to the Depths by Camera and Pen

Linking, in an unusual motor tour, the two opposing landmarks of the continental United States, Mt. Whitney, 14,501 feet above the level of the sea, and the salt beds of Death Valley, 284 feet below sea level, a scouting party from the Albertson Motor Company, Dodge Brothers dealers, last week answered the challenge to adventure in these strangely near geographical wonders. Historic ground, chaotically rugged, or fearsomely desolate, was covered in nearly a thousand miles of thrilling travel in the famous Dodge Brothers Scout Car, "Old 900,000," and stories, once tragically written in human blood and hardship, have been recorded as a tribute to the boundless value of the efficient motor car to man. The photographs and the drawings above convey some idea of the grandeur of the scenery on the trip. Photos by C. W. McFarlane, copyrighted by Roy A. McMillan.

Lowest Spot in Country and Highest Visited on Tour

Mountain and Desert Vie in Thrilling Spots

Many Tragedies of Early Days Recalled

BY C. W. MacFARLANE

And they say adventure is dead!

Not while the frigid gleam of a continental pinnacle signals a frozen challenge! Not when a seething sunken valley fetidly breaths its arid defiance!

Not while there are motor cars—and Mt. Whitney—and Death Valley!

In an adventurous, and certainly one of the most unusual motor tours in automobile history, a scouting party from the Albertson Motor Company, Dodge Brothers dealers for Los Angeles, has just returned a few days ago from a thrilling trek that led from the precipitous, snow-laden slopes near the crest of Mt. Whitney, highest mountain in the continental United States, to the heat-tortured floor of Death Valley, lowest point in the United States.

Swirling over nearly 1000 miles of desert roads in the famous Dodge Brothers scout car "Old 900,000," the two motor adventurers composing the Albertson party succeeded in linking these two natural geographical extremes.

Strangely enough, both Mt. Whitney and Death Valley are located within the confines of Inyo county, and are scarcely more than sixty miles apart as the crow flies.

GEOGRAPHICAL FEATURES

Readers unfamiliar with these continental landmarks will no doubt welcome a short geographical preface concerning their discovery. The jagged, saw-toothed crest of Mt. Whitney, rising 14,501 feet above the level of the sea, was officially seen first from Mt. Brewer by members of the Geological Survey of California in 1864, and was named for the distinguished head of that survey. It was first climbed, as near as can be ascertained, on August 18, 1873, by two men, Bigole and Johnson, and received at their hands the rather inglorious name of Fisher's Peak. On September 6, of the same year a man named Carl Rabe made the perilous ascent, carrying with him

LONDON GETS SIGNALS

[BY CABLE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

LONDON, Oct. 31.—Piccadilly is to have a system of electric traffic signals modeled on that in use in New York, Detroit and Los Angeles and other large American cities. This is a conquest by another American city which has had to overcome the usual opposition.

Of late recently traffic congestion in the large centers of the United Kingdom caused to the average Englishman but another manifestation of "Yankee madness." The traffic officer gesticulating in the middle of the street was a fit theme for humorous comment.

OPEN BIDS ON MALIBU ROAD JOB

Los Angeles Firm Low on 6.25-Mile Section North of Santa Monica

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

SACRAMENTO, Oct. 31.—Six miles of additional paving on the scenic Oxnard-San Juan Capistrano highway will be undertaken shortly by the California Highway Commission. Bids were opened today for the 6.25-mile section between Latigo Creek and Las Flores Canyon, in Western Los Angeles county.

Ed Johnson & Sons of Los Angeles were the low bidders. Their bid totaled $209,466. The engineer's estimate was $231,537.50.

The new pavement will be a continuation of that already placed north of Santa Monica. It will be of cement concrete, twenty feet wide, with edges and center thickened to nine inches. The minimum thickness will be six inches. Awarding of the contract will be considered by the commission at its next meeting in San Francisco, Friday, November 13.

ROAD SHOW TO OPEN SOON

Twenty-Five Acres Given Over to Big Exhibitor on Exposition Grounds in San Francisco

The greatest road-building demonstration ever held in the West! The largest exposition of road equipment ever assembled together! The biggest truck show ever put on anywhere, all occupying twenty-five acres on the Marina, the site of the Panama-Pacific-International Exposition, San Francisco.

These are the claims made from the headquarters of the All-Western Road Show which is to be held in San Francisco the week of November 9. With only a few days left before its opening, the various show and convention programs are practically completed and everything is in readiness for those who will attend the show.

ROAD BUILDERS TO ATTEND

The show and conventions will draw road builders from every point in the eleven Western States. A large frame building, located on the grounds, will house six separate conventions, each one arranged for separate groups of road builders. There will be a contractors' day, a road commissioners' day, a distributors' day, a day for sand and gravel producers and one for State road building departments.

An information booth has been established alongside the conventions halls, where all delegates and visitors will register. The booth will be the clearance house for incoming and outgoing mail, assignment of visitors to their respective hotels and will serve as an information bureau and press headquarters.

The Western Association of State Highway Officials will hold their annual convention Monday of show week.

The Western States County Officials Association, called together by Secretary Stanley Abel, will assemble in annual meeting on Wednesday of show week.

Other conventions are the Western Construction Equipment Distributors, who will meet on Tuesday. The Pacific Coast Sand & Gravel Association on Friday and the Western Highway League on Tuesday.

BANQUET PLANNED

The conventions will wind up with a grand banquet at the Hotel Fairmont. The banquet is the only social event which includes the women and will be held under the auspices of the Western Construction Equipment Distributors. After the dinner, men prominent in road building circles will give

STAGES TO HAVE SLEEPING BERTHS

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

YUMA (Ariz.) Oct. 31.—Announcement has been made that the Borderland stages between Los Angeles and El Paso, via Yuma and Phoenix, soon are to be equipped for sleeping, with berth sections. This stage connection between California and Arizona has gained in popularity since the coming of cooler weather.

CONTRACTS AWARDED FOR SPANS

First of Five Ornamental Bridges Over Yosemite to Cost $32,785

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

SACRAMENTO, Oct. 31.—At a meeting here the California Highway Commission awarded contracts on the following State highway projects:

Mariposa county. The building of the first of five ornamental reinforced concrete bridges over the Merced River on the new Yosemite Park highway. Contract awarded to Otto Parlier of Tulare, whose bid was $32,785. Engineer's estimate was $41,075. The structure will be located near the National Park entrance at El Portal.

San Luis Obispo county. At Pismo a railroad grade crossing and several bad curves on the Coast Route are to be eliminated by a new location requiring a mile of heavy grading. Collins & Seppi of Stockton submitted a bid for $56,305. Engineer's estimate $70,916.

Santa Barbara county. Grading and surfacing with crushed gravel or stone about 1.4 miles between Summerland and Montecito. Contract awarded to McCray Company of Los Angeles. Their bid was $55,907.20. Engineer's estimate was $74,796.50.

PLANTS WORK AT TOP SPEED

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

DETROIT, Oct. 31. — Predictions that 1925 would surpass all existing records of motor-car production in America, made by Alfred Reeves, general manager of the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce, and published in this section, seems amply verified by a survey of the situation this week.

General Motors, with all five plants running at full capacity, expects to exceed September when the corporation had its record month of its history, delivering to dealers 88,379 vehicles. Chevrolet, which is enjoying the greatest year in its remarkable history, is finding it difficult to make inroads on orders and is compelled to keep

Packard Six Owners Are Loyal to Packard

PERHAPS you have wondered why so few Packard Six cars are offered for sale by used car dealers.

The reason is that 98 out of every 100 Packard Six owners remain loyal to Packard. They never give up their cars for any other make.

Records recently compiled in 51 representative cities, both large and small, in every section of the Union and in Canada, show that out of all the Packard Six cars sold during the past five years only 2 out of every 100 have been replaced.

As these replacements were generally for reasons having nothing to do with either car or service, the chances are really 100 to 1 that you too will be satisfied if you buy a Packard Six.

Pedestrian Traffic in Los Angeles Best Controlled in United States

REPORT MADE ON CONDITIONS

Public Safety Head of Auto Club Back from Survey

Finds Cleveland Only City With Ordinance

Reduction in Fatalities Here Proves Worth

Pedestrian traffic in Los Angeles is the best-controlled of any city in the United States, according to the observations of E. B. Lefferts, manager of the public safety department of the Automobile Club of Southern California, who has returned home after a five weeks' trip throughout the large eastern centers of population for the purpose of making a traffic survey. Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Washington, Chicago, Detroit, Cleveland and Omaha were visited. Lefferts, who went east primarily to attend the annual council of the National Safety Congress at Cleveland, made an extended trip of investigation to gather data that will be available for all cities in Southern California.

MAKES OBSERVATION

The conclusion that Los Angeles pedestrian traffic is the best-regulated was based on the personal observation of Lefferts. In only one of the cities named is there a pedestrian, or so-called jay-walking ordinance similar to that obtaining in Los Angeles since January 14, last. Cleveland is the only city with such regulations, but they are not being enforced as effectively as in Los Angeles. New York has tried the educational plan to make pedestrians safe, but this is not proving very effective in that it is difficult to reach all the people by this means. Chicago has no pedestrian ordinance at all, with the result that there is a vast amount of jay-walking. Boston, with its narrow streets, is becoming constantly more dangerous to persons on foot and apparently is badly in need of pedestrian regulations.

FATALITIES REDUCED

That these conclusions are not based on merely personal opinion or governed by prejudice is indicated by the reduction of fatalities in Los Angeles among pedestrians attributable to automobiles during the first nine months of 1925. A comparison with 1924 shows a marked decrease. Fatal motor vehicle and pedestrian collisions for the first nine months of 1924 totaled 113. For the corresponding period this year there was a total of eighty-four, a reduction of 25 per cent. This reduction comes in the face of an increased number of automobiles and pedestrians alike over last year, so that actually a higher percentage of efficiency can be attributed to the Los Angeles jay-walking ordinance than is revealed by the total deaths recorded.

Traffic departments, automobile clubs and safety organizations in the eastern cities are greatly interested in Los Angeles' control of pedestrian traffic. The experience of this city is exceptional because of the fact that it has the greatest number of automobiles per capita in the nation, and in addition to this, it is the Mecca for motor tourists from outside the State at all times of the year, giving it the additional burden of controlling considerable traffic from all parts of the country.

CITIES INTERESTED

Eastern cities are also interested in the movement under way in Southern California for the adoption of a uniform traffic ordinance. The action of the various cities of Southern California to unify their ordinances is expected to have an influence in other States. Such an ordinance has been prepared by the public safety and legal departments of the Automobile Club and the Los Angeles Traffic Commission for submission to Southland cities for their consideration, and it is expected that in view of the benefits to be derived from uniform traffic laws, the larger cities of Southern California will act promptly on the proposed law.

EXTREMES OF NATURE LINKED

a mountain mercurial barometer, and made the first determination of its height. The illustrious savant, Langley, conducted the first great scientific expedition to the summit, and three men of his party, Michaels, Nancy and Keeler, are believed to have been the first to spend a night at the top. Mt. Whitney, however, despite its formidable aspect, has been a kindly giant and its toll of human life has been small, due to the lack of icy crevasses that distinguish other high peaks in the country.

Not so Death Valley.

This dreadful sink, so appropriately named, is tragically linked with the settling of the great West. Into its fiery maw unwittingly trod the '49ers, and Death Valley took its toll. Lying directly east of Mt. Whitney, between the Panamint and Funeral ranges, this scorched depression is 284 feet below sea level at its lowest point. One hundred miles long and from two to ten miles wide, its utter desolation is truly terrifying. And yet it is not without fascination.

The rose of a desert dawn had already tinged the tips of the Sierra Nevadas when the Dodge Brothers party arrived in Lone Pine, near the eastern base of Mt. Whitney, after an all-night ride through the desert gloom from Los Angeles. Preparations for the ascent up the incredibly steep eastern slope of the great granite culminating point of the Sierras, already partially made, were quickly completed and our guide had already started with our horses and pack animals for the saddle station at the foot of Whitney, where we were to join him later. The road from Lone Pine to the saddle station led us steadily upward along the slope of the great alluvial fan that curves down into the Owens Valley. It is from here that the magnificence of the High Sierras stands forth. But before our eyes could fill with their mighty sweep, we were at the saddle station, packs were lashed—

And our adventure had begun!

There is one thing to be said about the trails. They waste no time in going up. Rearing up over them our horses seemed to rise their own height in their length. Granite gorges swallowed us, and then released us again to other and more chaotic splendors. Up, always up! Hours of ascent, with frequent rests, brought us only the growing chill of frozen winds. Icicles could be seen on the rocks of a stream that brawled noisily along. And then the chung, chung of our horses hoofs in the snow. Just below the snowline, at 8500 feet elevation, we made our first night's camp.

THE SECOND DAY

No one but the beholder can picture the brutal immensity of this tremendous country. There is no softening vegetation. A few tamaracks and pines cling precariously and defiantly to cold, sheer granite walls. Grim, sullen, and sinister, this country bids you no welcome, and if the dull granite could speak it would probably growl a rude warning to enter at your peril. On the horses and up the trail again. Then the breath-taking beauty of the lakes, crystal clear, icy-cold, emerald-hued and deep-rimmed with snow. We could go no farther. Deep, drifted snow, at about 11,000 feet elevation, ended our ascent. We had gone as high as we could on Mt. Whitney's forbidding slope. A snack and some photographs and we were on our way again, headed downward, where, in the hazy distance, we knew lay Death Valley.

With incredible swiftness, it seemed, we made the descent, and were again behind the wheel whirling on our way. Before we pass from the majestic shadow of Mt. Whitney, however, be it noted, that there have been several unsuccessful attempts to scale its heights in wintertime. Two men, Church and Marsh, attempted it in March, 1909, but were baffled by treacherous snow ledges on the knife-like ridges near the summit. Contrast the herculean efforts of these two struggling toward the summit in the winter snows, to that of another, John Muir. Easy, effortless, and sure are his movements, as the dusk of a summer night finds him near the crest. Companionless, but not alone, he walks onward, unafraid. He is at home. John Muir was among the first to spend a night on Mt. Whitney.

A DESERT PHILOSOPHER

During the night ride from Little Lake to Randsburg on our way to Death Valley, there enters the picture something equally as rare as a day in June, a truck-driving philosopher. Doubtless the load of honey he was driving to market had sweetened his disposition in the face of adversity. At any rate, we found him stuck, bogged down in a soupy mess of mud, the result of a slight leak from the Aqueduct. However, despite the fact that he was on the wrong road to begin with, that he was hopelessly, even despairingly, stuck in the mud, and that the nearest help was ten miles away, he cheerfully refused our generous offers of help, optimistically announced his ability to cope with the situation single-handedly and sent us away talking to ourselves. No way one in a million. Right!

THE THIRD DAY

Out from Randsburg, famous as the location of the world's largest silver mine, the desert lays its vaguely disturbing, yet fascinating spell strongly upon you. Distances fade. Near-by hills are in reality miles away. Phantom lakes, green-bordered, shimmer in the distance, then disappear, and in their stead are hard, dry lake bottoms.

Out into the very heart of the Mojave Desert, past Granite Wells and Owl Holes, the sturdy car battling the racked and cloudburst torn roads that led up dry streambeds and over wash-board washes, swinging finally into Shoshone. Here, at the table of "Dad" Fairbanks, beloved desert character, whose bravery has saved many a desert traveler from death, the motor adventurers were hospitably welcomed, and final preparations made for the last leg of the trip into the lethal regions of Death Valley.

GOOD-BY, DEATH VALLEY

The name, Death Valley, came from the parched lips of the unfortunate '49-ers, who saw their companions wither and die under the intolerable heat of this glaring cauldron. The awful fate that sent nearly a score of these hardy emigrants to perish in this forsaken spot was graphically recorded in Manley's epic, "Death Valley in '49." Toiling across the plains on their way to California, they ventured into this yawning hell of heat and were trapped.

At a point near what is now Bennett's Wells, named for the leader of that ill-fated emigrant train, the wearied oxen laid down their burden, and their almost skeletonized carcasses furnished food for the sad survivors, until they were rescued by the heroism of Manley and Rogers, who plodded on ahead and brought relief. No imagination can picture the hardships they suffered. It is bad enough today, even with a dependable motor car. What must it have been in those terrible days?

Manley says: "Just as we were ready to leave and return to camp, we took off our hats, and then, overlooking the scene of so much trial, suffering and death, spoke the thought uppermost, saying, 'Good-by, Death Valley.' Many accounts have been given to the world as to the origin of the name, and by whom it was thus designated, but ours were the first footsteps, and we the party who named it, the saddest and most dreadful name that came to us first from its memories."

THE GUN-SIGHT LEAD

Death Valley might have been forgotten and the pioneer lives lost there the only victims of its murderous heat, but for the mythical Gun-Sight Lead. Bennett, of the original party, so the story goes, had brought with him out of Death Valley a bit of rock, saved because of its metallic weight and possible value. When settlements were reached, Bennett decided to make a front sight for his gun out of the bit of rock that he had chipped in a moment of despair, and in so doing found out its true value. It was pure silver. Thus was born the Gun-Sight Lead, which for many a prospector, led only to death under the dancing rays of that treacherous valley.

FURNACE CREEK

Furnace Creek, so named because a prospector's reduction furnace was found beside its tepid waters, leads down to Furnace Creek Ranch, a tiny green oasis in the midst of glaring desolation and it was here that the Dodge Brothers party spent the third night. Our journey from Mt. Whitney to Death Valley had been accomplished. We had toured from 11,000 feet above the sea to 284 feet below the sea. We had driven over the same trails that once bore the shuffling imprint of '49'ers. It was a memorable and never-to-be-forgotten experience. It was an adventure!

ODD FACTS

The effect of the heat in this incandescent valley evidences itself in curious fashion. With the thermometer repeatedly registering 130 to 135 deg. in the shade, meat, when fresh killed and dipped in brine, is cured by the sun in an hour. Eggs can be roasted in the sand. Furniture warps, splits, and falls to pieces.

Water barrels lose their hoops within an hour after being emptied. The air is not only hot, it is kiln-dried. Roasted winds fairly lick the moisture from the human body. It is this extreme dryness that deals death to the luckless prospector. Intolerable rays draw from his body the last drop of moisture and his drinking supply, unless he be desert-wise, is rapidly exhausted. Then comes insanity, tortured eyes see the glint of cool waters, and the doomed man staggers on, and plunges in that fancied depths, a victim of Death Valley. We speak, of course, of the summer months. In winter, it is often delightful in the valley, that the Piute Indians so aptly named "Tomesha," meaning ground afire.

It is now that the motorist can glimpse Death Valley at its best. But do not trust it too far.

"LOOP" TRIP POPULAR

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

PRESCOTT (Ariz.) Oct. 31.—A new "loop" trip is becoming very popular among California tourists. The route is by the Old Trails Highway to the Grand Canyon and back to Los Angeles through Prescott, Phoenix and Yuma.

She'd Make a Statuette—if She Would Be Still!

Bobby Tremaine was persuaded to halt for a wee fraction of a second while Art Streib punched his camera jigger, but that was as long as she would be still. The picture was made to illustrate her as a model for a radiator ornament statuette, but it wouldn't be true to life. A statuette is motionless, and anyone who has seen Bobby at the Metropolitan knows she is anything else but!

Radiator Cap Model Really is Too Lively

Bobby Tremaine is creating such a sensation with her typical down South Charleston interpretation, that when a group of officials from the Willys-Overland Pacific Company saw her featured presentation in the Metropolitan prologue the other night, they hit upon the idea of asking her to pose for a statuette for a radiator ornament.

The request was conveyed to Miss Tremaine through officials of the theater and she sent word back that she thought it a whiz of an idea.

Bobby is full of whiz. She has to be to execute the whirlwind dance that has set the nation agog.

Bobby said she learned the Charleston from Johnnie Stephenson, a sure-enough darky, who starred in "Shufflin' Along" and really introduced the acrobatic steps that are recommended as a permanent cure for obesity.

When she brought the Charleston to Los Angeles, Bobby was flooded with pleas to teach it. She has been giving all the Metropolitan girls lessons between acts and rehearsals, and when she was taken out in one of the new Overland six 66 luxe sedans, she perpetrated a near traffic jam on Rampart Boulevard by giving an impromptu exhibition just out of sheer effervescent spirits. It was really difficult to get a photo of her.

SIGN NEW DEALERS

The nineteenth dealer, D. R. Tompkins Motor Car Company of Glendale, has just been signed up by the Lord Motor Car Company for distributors of the new Jordan Line Eight in Southern California. Other new dealers are Advanced Motors, Huntington Park; Omer Brubaker of San Bernardino, Ralph Abbott and Wilshire Motors of Los Angeles.

UPWARD GLANCE SAVES ACCIDENT

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

FLAGSTAFF (Ariz.) Oct. 31.—A tourist on the highway west of Flagstaff looked up from his tire repair to dodge a careening sedan, that passed to strike a log and overturn. Apparently, the car had been started down the road and then deserted by its occupants. It was found to have been stolen from a Flagstaff man who had left it locked in front of his home.

RESOLUTION IS ADOPTED HERE

Tax is Cut Each Buyer to Save $30

Result of Hearing Awaited by Dealers

Ultimate Consumer Pays Sum Deemed Unnecessary

Seeking to save every future purchaser of an automobile an average of $30, members of the Motor Car Dealers' Association of Los Angeles passed unanimously at their last meeting a resolution adding their demand to that of thousands of other influential bodies that all Federal vehicle excise taxes be immediately removed and repealed.

The Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives is now in session. The first hearing for the repeal of all automotive war taxes was scheduled to be entertained by them last week. No final results of the hearing have been announced as yet. However, the dealers say there is still plenty of time for everybody to let Washington know how motorists feel about paying a premium for the privilege of owning an automobile when Federal taxes on other forms of transportation have already been removed long ago.

The tax on automobiles was first imposed by the War Revenue Act of 1917, took effect in October of that year, and specified a 3 per cent tax on the wholesale value. In 1920 the rate on automobiles and motorcycles was raised to 5 per cent. The total tax collected by the government under this act in 1918 was $22,981,268.35. It affects every motor car, motorcycle, motor truck, and all tires, accessories and parts.

While this tax is imposed directly upon the manufacturer it is passed on down the line through jobbers and dealers, to the ultimate consumer or car owner. It has for years been considered an unfair burden by all concerned and its repeal would mean a direct reduction on the delivered

Los Angeles Dealers Seek Repeal of Motor War Taxes

RESOLUTION IS ADOPTED HERE

Tax is Cut Each Buyer to Save $30

Week of Hearing Awaited by Dealers

Ultimate Consumer Pays Taxes Deemed Unnecessary

Stating to save every future purchaser of an automobile an average of $30, members of the Motor Car Dealers' Association of Los Angeles passed unanimously at their last meeting a resolution adding their demand to that of hundreds of other influential bodies that all Federal vehicle and vehicle taxes be immediately removed and repealed.

The Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives is now in session. The first hearing for the repeal of all automobile war taxes was scheduled to be considered by them last week. No final results of the hearing have been announced as yet.

However, the dealers say there is still plenty of time for everybody to let Washington know how they feel about paying a tax for the privilege of owning an automobile when Federal taxes on other forms of transportation have already been removed or soon will be.

The tax on automobiles was first levied by the War Revenue Act of 1917, took effect in October of that year, and specified a 3 per cent tax on the wholesale value. In 1919 the rate on automobiles and motorcycles was raised to 5 per cent. The total tax collected by the government under this act in 1919 was $23,981,268.35. It affects every motor car, motorcycle, motor truck, and all tires, accessories and parts.

"This tax is imposed directly upon the manufacturer it is true, but down the line through the jobbers and dealers, to the ultimate consumer or car owner," the resolution reads. "It has for years been considered a definite burden by all concerned, and its repeal would mean a reduction on the delivered price of each automotive commodity affected.

The big automobile organizations are in the fight for repeal of the tax 100 per cent it is reported. Thomas P. Henry, president, and Ernest N. Smith, manager of the American Automobile Association, and H. H. Rice, chairman of the special taxation committee of the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce, are among the leaders in aggressive move to relieve the nation of this burden, which is proclaimed unfair, un-American, and unnecessary.

It is estimated that nearly $1,000,000,000 has been paid to the government by motorists under this tax act.

The direct war tax on the older forms of transportation, including railway freight, express and passenger traffic, oil pipe lines, telegraph and telephone, has been removed.

Under the manufacturers' and products tax which originally affected about forty classes of merchandise, only seven classes remain subject to tax, and automotive products head the list of the seven still paying tribute to the war that ended seven years ago.

The local dealers' resolution follows:

Resolved: That, whereas, it is manifestly unfair to tax any one group, especially for the purpose of general welfare, and,

Whereas, Congress recognized the unfairness of the war emergency taxes by repealing some of them, and,

Whereas, auto taxes are taxes on transportation and other special Federal taxes on transportation have been removed, and

Whereas, a tax on replacement parts is a tax on misfortune,

Therefore, be it unanimously resolved by the Motor Car Dealers' Association of Los Angeles that Congress remove and repeal all Federal automotive excise tax.

And be it further resolved, that a copy of this action be forwarded to Secretary of the Treasury Andrew W. Mellon and all Senators and Congressmen from California.

BRUNDAGE JOINS SMITH

D. A. Brundage, for years with Chevrolet and later with the Reo Motor Car Company of California, has just been named office manager and auditor of the downtown headquarters of Stanley W. Smith, Inc., retail dealers for the Hudson-Essex, according to the announcement of Stanley W. Smith, president of the company, yesterday.

adding to its working force in a season which is usually regarded as "dull."

Ford, now fully recovered from the recession caused by the change to new models and nearing the 9500-cars-a-day mark, made and sold 200,000 cars and trucks in October.

With but one or two exceptions automobile plants in the Detroit district are operating at top speed. There are scarcely any plants in the price class below $1500 that have not made more cars in the first nine months of this year than they did during the entire twelve months of 1924.

Figures compiled by the Detroit Employers' Association indicate that October, generally one of the lower months of the year, when plants "taper off" in production, will be better than September. The survey shows that there are employed in two-thirds of the factories here 70,562 more workers than at the same time a year ago. Incidentally it is announced that the Ford Motor Company has reached a new high peak for employment with 173,000 persons on its pay rolls.

Up to the present so great has been the demand for cars that dealers have been unable to accumulate stocks. They have been able to dispose of practically all the cars they could get while several of the more popular makes have had to keep customers waiting for weeks at a time. They have been faced with a more or less oversold condition since March.

At that stage few makers could see what was coming and the factories strenuously pressed propaganda that the practice of forcing cars upon dealers to their detriment would be discontinued.

Now, however, the situation is reversing itself. The year so far has been so profitable for the dealers that the largest distributors are anxious to accept cars in quantities beyond their immediate needs in the belief that 1926 is going to be as good as, if not better, than 1925.

Shipments of Wills-Sainte Claire cars for October will easily exceed those for the corresponding month a year ago, company officials assert, following the announcement that September shipments were 247 per cent higher than in the same month in 1924. Ever since the introduction of the new six last January there has been a growing demand and every month has shown an increase over the same period a year ago. Even during the summer months Wills-Sainte Claire maintained practically a full production schedule.

Aroused over the report that glaring headlights are the indirect cause of an increasing number of accidents and holding that they represent one of the industry's unsolved problems the Detroit section, Society of Automotive Engineers, has decided to exert its influence toward encouraging research work on this problem.

As a first step Henry M. Crane, past president of the society, will address Detroit members on November 5. To demonstrate his ideas he will have automobiles in the meeting room equipped with and without improved headlights. These cars will point at one another so that the drivers in each of the respective front seats can get an impression of actual glare conditions as they would appear on the road when the two cars meet.

President Roy Chapin of the Hudson Motor Car Company takes issue with the belief in some quarters that the amazing demand for cars during the past nine months is due to the fact that the country is having its first great closed year, and that the business of past months has involved a complete turnover from the open to the closed models.

Mr. Chapin has little faith in the statement that much of the production is due to an increase in the demand for closed cars that would be satisfied as soon as many drivers of open cars had turned them in for closed models. Closed cars, he says, always will be in demand, and once a man has driven a closed car and is impressed with its utility and comfort he will just as anxiously replace with a new close dcar as he turned in his open model.

As far as can be told now, Mr. Chapin thinks next year should bring the motor-car industry business as great as this year.

Mexico is anxious to see completed an adequate concrete highway from some place on the border to the city of Mexico, according to B. Estades, Packard dealer in the city of Mexico, who is a Detroit visitor.

"Such a road," declared Mr. Estades, "would afford tourists, particularly winter ones, a most charming and picturesque journey to a city that might well be the pleasure seeker's paradise. The highway is not a dream in any sense, for the Mexican government already has a Chicago firm of contractors working on the enterprise. It will be one of the greatest influences for good that the country has undertaken.

"Completion of one great highway, such as I have mentioned, would be only the forerunner of others. Tourists, coming to us demanding food and shelter and paying liberally for what they receive, would stimulate our people, and they would be literally forced into the march of progress."

By the end of the current year, unless something unforeseen takes place, Michigan will join the select circles of States in which more than 1,000,000 automobiles are registered. This list now includes California, New York, Ohio and Illinois. Thus far more than 950,000 pairs of licenses have been issued.

In the past few days, branch offices which have exhausted their supplies, have resieged the main office for additional tags. A total of 980,000 sets of plates was ordered for the year, and there was doubt as to whether this number would suffice.

The number of cars of all types in Michigan now is nearly one to four persons. The increase over 1924 is something more than 100,000.

Motor car operators in Michigan are paying the State approximately twice as much this year as they paid last for the privilege of operating on State highways. In 1924 the receipts from Michigan cars for license plates was $11,246,322. This year the plates were sold on a weight basis, instead of on a combined horsepower and weight scale and will cost according to present estimates, about $14,000,000. In addition, a two-cent gas tax has been levied. Up to September 1, motorists had paid $5,121,488 on this account.

R. H. Collins, Chicago Chrysler distributor, Saturday headed a driveaway shipment of 300 Chrysler cars, believed to be the largest shipment of its kind ever made. The occasion was the annual visit of his own and his dealers' organization to the Chrysler plants. The 300 members of the Chicago organization left that city on Thursday night on a special train for Detroit. Arriving here Friday they inspected the Chrysler plants rounding off the day with a banquet given by the Chrysler sales Corporation. Saturday morning each man left at the wheel of a new car.

Because of insistent demands from Willys-Overland dealers, Miss Frances Troendle, Detroit woman, who has caused a sensation through being the only woman to tear down and assemble a Willys-Knight sleeve-valve engine, started on the road this week to continue demonstrations in Michigan towns.

Miss Troendle, whose nimble fingers have been the subject of comment while assembling Knight engines, has performed this feat before thousands of Detroit spectators the past three weeks.

The greatest sales, production and earnings in the history of the Packard Motor Car Company are recorded in the annual report signed by Alvan MacAuley, president, for the year ending August 31, last. The company showed net earnings of $12,191,081.21.

Sales during the year amounted to $60,475,989.88, while the number of passenger cars produced was 24,246.

The current assets of the company total $29,281,414.82, and three and one-half times current liabilities.

Bush Moves to Location Near New Building

In order to expedite matters for all concerned, William E. Bush, president of the Pierce-Arrow distributing organization, announced yesterday that their offices and new car sales force will be opened tomorrow at their temporary headquarters at 3200 South Figueroa.

The service department will remain in the present plant at Seventeenth and Grand until the new Pierce-Arrow building at Twenty-first and Figueroa is completed, Bush said.

"We will be a bit scattered for a few weeks," said Bush, "but the people who have taken our old location are eager to get started on their plans, and as long as we will be almost across the street from our new building now under construction, our final move into our new modern quarters will be just that much easier.

"Anybody who wants one of those new Pierce-Arrows will find us all right on the job at Twenty-second and Figueroa, Monday morning.

A Few Truths about Terms —in connection with Studebaker

Any responsible person can buy a Studebaker on the right terms. That is, terms which represent good, sound business-practice.

The Studebaker policy of "No-Yearly-Models" is a vital factor here. It insures against the loss that is otherwise inevitable when current models become "last year's."

Besides, when you buy a Studebaker on terms from the Hoffman Company, the transaction involves no outside finance company, as ordinarily.

Studebaker's liberal Budget Payment Plan was made with consideration for the purchaser and with fair regard for his monthly income---not only next month's, but next year's.

NEW MARK FOR ENDURANCE SET

"Wild Bill" Seeley, Cowboy, Drives 150 Hours

Manacled to Steering Wheel for Entire Time

Uses Auburn Eight Sedan for 3469-Mile Run

A new world's driving record of 150 hours while handcuffed to the steering wheel of a motor car has just been established by "Wild Bill" Seeley, giant Oklahoma cowboy, piloting an Auburn straight eight sedan from Indianapolis, Ind., to Miami, Fla., a route of 3469 miles traversing fourteen States, through farming communities, the congested traffic of scores of cities and towns and over mountains and roads in every conceivable condition.

Telegraphic advices to O. R. Fuller, president and general manager of the White Auto Company, Auburn distributors here, state that "Wild Bill's" non-stop record of continuous driving without sleep tops by more than a full day a recent attempt in Los Angeles to hang up a new mark for a performance of this kind.

RUNS ON SCHEDULE

Running on a minute-to-minute schedule, securely manacled to the steering wheel and with official newspaper observers accompanying him in, relays Seeley toured through the following cities: Indianapolis; Dayton, Springfield, Columbus, O.; Wheeling, W. Va.; Pittsburgh, Butler, Newcastle, Penn.; Youngstown, Cleveland, O.; Erie, Penn.; Buffalo, Rochester, Syracuse, Albany, New York City, N.Y.; Newark, Trenton, N. J.; Philadelphia, Penn.; Baltimore, Md.; Richmond, Va.; Durham, Greensboro, Charlotte, N. C.; Spartansburg, Greenville, S. C.; Athens, Atlanta, Macon, Ga.; Jacksonville and Miami, Fla.

A stock Auburn straight eight sedan, equipped with everything necessary to insure his physical comfort on the punishing drive was provided for him by E. P. Cord, vice-president of the Auburn Automobile Company of Auburn, Ind.

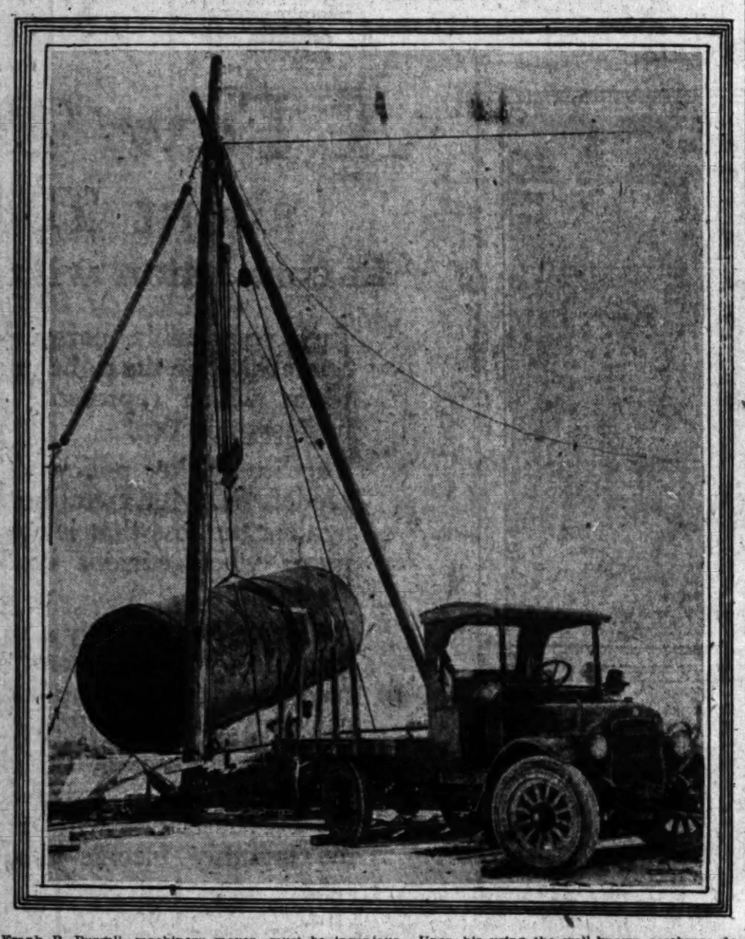
KEEPS CAR IN MOTION

With the exception of momentary delays to comply with stop signals and signs in the various cities along the route, Seeley kept the motor and wheels of his car in constant motion throughout the record run. Gas and oil were taken on while he rocked the car back and forth under its own power at filling stations.

In many places, as in New York City, a police escort cleared the way for him through dense crowds attracted by Seeley's performance. The Auburn pilot underwent physical examination at various points en route at the hands of doctors, who climbed in beside him and rode for a short distance, while conducting their examinations.

On three previous occasions Seeley established a record for drives of the kind. His first one, in California the early part of this year, took him over the mountain trails near Auburn, Placerville and up into the American River Canyon over almost impassable roads; his second drive was into the snow-bound confines of the Yosemite, and his third experience was staged in sweltering August weather in Cleveland, O., where he drove for 123 hours, which established a record at that time.

Here's New Use for Light Truck



Frank P. Purcell, machinery mover, must be ingenious. Upon his using the well-known cerebrum depends on how easily he does his work—and what the profits are. So it didn't take him long to figure he could use his ton and a half Ruggles truck to good advantage in hoisting a water tank to the roof of a Los Angeles building. He did, as the photo shows.

POOR CARBURETION CAUSES TROUBLE

Excepting troubles arising from faulty lubrication, most motor troubles may be traced directly to improper carburetion, according to C. A. Roesch, president of the Alemite Company of California.

"About 90 per cent of all motor troubles such as carbon, pitted valves, missing, knocks and scored cylinders, revert to one source—improper mixture in the carburetor," said Roesch. "A drop of water or a speck of dirt in the gasoline clogs the carburetor. The motor sputters or stalls, and the driver changes the carburetor adjustment, or runs with choke open. The mixture is overloaded and too rich, and then come carbon, overheated motor and eventually scored cylinders.

"To overcome this trouble manufacturers of the Alemite high-presure lubricating system have perfected an automatic gasoline filter—the Gas-Co-Lator."

LONDON TO GET STREET SIGNALS

Then came the incomprehensible lighthouse towers in the traffic channels of main street. It was all on a par with skyscrapers, mass production, Ford cars and fundamentalism. It was American.

But the coming of the automobile has changed much in England. Almost overnight the number of people coming into motor consciousness increases by thousands. Mass production is no longer peculiar to America. The British motor manufacturers are adopting the methods and are putting on the market cars suited to the new demand and at reasonable prices and on easy terms.

Suddenly the old cities of England, with their narrow, crooked streets, came to realize that a traffic problem could be a real to study conditions and remedies for traffic evils. But at first they were slow to adopt American methods. The American problems were so different, they said.

American cities have long, straight streets, while those in most of the ancient cities of British continually change their direction. The London "bobby" was first thrown into the breach. Whenever anyone is puzzled about anything in London he asks a policeman. Perhaps there is not elsewhere in the world a more efficient, painstaking and patient body of officials.

And so the policemen in London became traffic officers. As they say in England, they were put on "point duty." They are serving still in their quiet, courteous, authoritative way. They do not scold or threaten or dictate imperiously, but quietly and helpfully they direct traffic. Their efficient service is remarked by all visitors to the country.

And now there is to be an attempt to adapt the mechanical devices which play so large a part in traffic control in American cities. At first the experiment will be made in the simplest way. Some lights will be placed at intersections along the great thoroughfare known as Piccadilly, to be snapped off and on by the policeman on point duty at Piccadilly Circus.

The chief source of congestion in this great trading center has been the interference of traffic coming in from across streets, with the heavy currents that flow continuously along Piccadilly. Policemen on point duty at all the various intersections used their judgment in holding up traffic to permit these crossings to be effected. The result was a lack of coordination and much delay.

Because of its varied character, the traffic in London streets always must move more slowly than in most of the great cities of America. There still is a good deal of horse-drawn traffic. There are heavy vans; long queues of omnibuses; big, bungling carts drawn by heavy draft horses; quaint little hucksters' turnouts drawn by flap-eared donkeys who see no need to hurry. And, mingling in all this turbid stream of traffic, are men and boys on foot, some pushing barrows or two-wheeled carts, others carrying baskets or boxes upon their heads. It is a mass of life and property that must be cared for, directed, protected, prodded forward, held back, according to the needs of every narrow street corner and every crooked passageway.

There is no thought of erecting great control watch towers such as are used in Detroit or Chicago or New York. They could not be effective over sufficient distances. At least that is the opinion of London police officials at present. But the signal lights at street intersections like those in use in Los Angeles will receive a trial. Perhaps later some further adaptation of the methods in use in America may be found practicable.

FIVE-PASSENGER SEDAN POPULAR

For all-round convenience and comfort for every passenger, it is doubtful if any body type will ever equal the standard five-passenger sedan, dealers declare. Year in and year out, they say, it proves its unfailing popularity, and while other types have sometimes temporarily outsold it, the sedan has a more loyal following perhaps than any other type of motor car.

"There is an all-round appeal to the five-passenger sedan that probably no other body type that will ever be developed will equal," says J. E. Brown, Southern California manager for Don Lee. "We find this season to be no exception to the rule that the five-passenger sedan is the most consistently popular model.

"That is not surprising to us this year, however, for Cadillac has produced in their sedan model a car of unusual attractiveness from every angle. The chances that any body designer will ever be able to plan a body that will give more complete satisfaction than the sedan seem very remote today."

Motor Used as Derrick for Big Water Tank

"The most novel use of a motor truck that has ever come to our attention is a ton and a half model Ruggles truck used by Frank P. Purcell, machinery mover, to supply the power necessary to hoist tons of machinery to the top of buildings," says Lester Poyer of D. F. Poyer & Son, Ruggles truck distributors at 324 East Sixth street.

"An example of the strength of the Ruggles motor was forcibly demonstrated this week when Mr. Purcell took the contract to hoist two nine-ton water tanks five feet in diameter and twenty feet long to the top of the tall Carondelet garage, located on West Sixth street at Carondelet, which is rapidly nearing completion. This feat was easily accomplished by the powerful Ruggles motor, which, according to Mr. Purcell, it is called upon to perform daily.

"In addition to being used for this special lifting purpose, this same Ruggles truck has been used daily for nearly three years to haul heavy loads of equipment used by a rigger from job to job."

Plan to Double Capacity of Plant in 1926

Plans are being made by the Paige-Detroit Motor Car Company to increase production by at least 100 per cent during 1926, according to word received by J. M. Sterling, general manager of the Paige Company of Southern California.

"In August and September the company's production doubled the figures of those two months last year," said Mr. Sterling. "And the demand for Paige cars is expected to continue brisk for the remainder of this year. Next year will be the biggest year in automobile history, and progressive manufacturers are getting ready for it now.

"New space and buildings have been acquired by the Paige factory, new and modern machinery is being installed which will facilitate the doubling of production, and this new equipment will doubtless be worked to capacity to meet the steadily increasing demand for Paige cars.

"This remarkable expansion with its accompanying enormous expense, has been made necessary to supply the dealers and fill the orders which pour into the factory every day. The factory is running to maximum capacity at present, and is unable to supply the demand will be no deviation from the company's high standard of quality."

"But with all this quantity production, we are assured that there for more cars.

EXCEPTIONAL RIDING COMFORT

The riding comfort of a motor car is not dependent upon its length, weight or cost, any more than the comfort of a home depends upon its size.

If the seats are deep enough and the proper distance from the floor; if the seat backs are correctly pitched for relaxation; if the upholstery is sufficiently stuffed and there is plenty of leg room; above all, if the springs are rightly designed and of proper length, you will have exceptional riding comfort. Otherwise, you will not.

Dodge Brothers, with characteristic thoroughness, studied and experimented with these details for years. Their findings were ultimately incorporated in the design of Dodge Brothers Motor Car—without question now a vehicle that ranks with the first in this vitally important feature.

For This Great Car

And $1680 buys a completely equipped car! Five balloon tires, disc wheels, bumpers front and rear, rear-view mirror, combination stop and tail light, automatic windshield wiper, heater, ash trays and arm rests, nickel plated radiator and all the sensational recent Jewett mechanical improvements.

Slow lower prices on all improved models as follows: Coach $1245, De Luxe Touring $1330, De Luxe Coach $1400, De Luxe Roadster $1500, De Luxe Sedan $1680. Prices f. o. b. Detroit, tax extra. Paige-hydraulic 4-wheel brakes at slight extra cost.

Always Making Them Finer

Henry McJewett

Surprise after surprise is in store for you in Jewett's improved De Luxe Sedan.

Knowing Jewett quality, you will naturally expect a great deal—but you will find even more!

First, there's dashing appearance, with the new two-tone coloring in bright and enduring lacquer.

Extra Room That Means Extra Comfort

There's more space for easy, relaxed riding than in numerous bigger, longer closed cars.

Upholstery of fine velvet mohair means that the richness you see when you swing open the big doors for the first time will outlast long, hard use.

Interior paneling and the dash are walnut finish. Arm rests are built in. De Luxe fittings, even including smoking equipment, are provided.

And Jewett Performance

When once you have learned what "Jewett performance" means, every question you may want to ask about power, speed, sturdiness, reliability and long life will be answered!

You can take the wheel of this Jewett with the comfortable assurance that the car under you will be equal to anything you may demand of it. You can pass automobiles that boast of their speed, you can climb where scarcely any car can follow—you quickly realize that you have only to ask with the touch of foot or hand and your Jewett will eagerly respond.

Now $120 Less

With all its improvements—with all of the fineness that 17 years of Jewett experience make possible—Jewett De Luxe Sedan is now priced $120 lower. A great car and a wonderful value always, it is now an almost inevitable choice, for any comparison you make will only further emphasize its superiority.

A Jewett Sedan is awaiting your inspection. Come in, or let it call for you.

A Single Ride Explains Its Popularity!

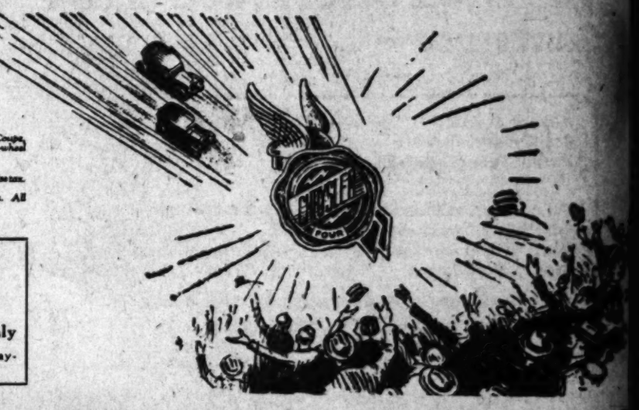
A single ride proves why the Chrysler Four justly merits the tremendous popularity it has built up in a few short months.

In sustained high speeds—in pliability of power—in economy—in durability and in freedom from mechanical attention which result from high quality of design, materials and workmanship—in ease of handling—and most emphatically in riding steadiness and comfort—the Chrysler Four gives results not found combined in cars of any type even beyond it in price.

As distinctive as its performance is a beauty so advanced that popular desire sweeps toward it inevitably.

Your nearest Chrysler dealer is eager to give you this ride that proves why the Chrysler is the Favored Four among tens of thousands of owners.



CHRYSLER FOUR—Touring Car, $1695; Club Coupe, $1695; Coach, $1745; Sedan, $1795. Hydraulic four-wheel brakes at slight extra cost.

TRIP RECORD IS SMASHED

Franklin Camel III Clips Time Between Here and Salt Lake City

Dashing down over the Arrowhead Trail from Salt Lake City to Los Angeles the long way by Goffs, the Franklin Camel III, Ralph Hamlin's famous scout car, hung up a new elapsed-time record for the 846 miles between the Mormon metropolis and the City of the Angels, covering the long stretch of mountain, desert and county road (with only 187 miles of pavement) in 22 hours and 14 minutes, which includes all stops, an average of 38.1 miles per hour.

Last year a stock Franklin 10-C touring car, driven by Charles J. Corr and Rupert L. Larson, hung up a new mark from Los Angeles to Salt Lake City, making the 600-mile run in an elapsed time of 24 hours and 37 minutes, and this mark still stands as the fastest stock or nonstock mark going up. Now the Franklin scout car, absolutely stock, even carrying the extra weight of bumpers and bumperettes because the new Series 11 Franklins come from the factory completely equipped, but running with top removed, has lopped off one hour and twenty-nine minutes from the fastest previous down time.

Not only that, but this new record was made with only one driver at the wheel, a new wrinkle in Salt Lake record runs, it is declared, as previously all such speed dashes over two pilots alternating at the wheel of the various cars. But Rupert L. Larson, who has been advertising manager for Ralph Hamlin for some five years or more, decided it was about time one man went straight through at the wheel and so he hung up a double mark. The observer on the run was Frank Jenkin of The Times.

It is pointed out by Ralph Hamlin that the stock Franklin tourer (the Franklin Camel III) at the main office of the Western Union in Salt Lake City at 5:04 p.m. Mountain time, October 24, and arrived at the main office of the Western Union in Los Angeles at 3:18 a.m. Pacific time, October 25. Further, Hamlin states that the scout car was not changed mechanically in any way for the run, and was with stock equipment except for one spotlight. Not only that, but it made the record over the old long road by way of Goffs, and not over the Silver Lake cut-off, which is eighty miles shorter.

Train time between the Utah city and Los Angeles was badly mangled by the Franklin on its run, yet the distance by rail is much shorter.

BIG ROAD SHOW TO OPEN SOON

short addresses which will be interspersed with cabaret numbers. At 11 o'clock the floor will be cleared for dancing.

A leading topic of conversation at the banquet will be Federal aid. Eastern propaganda which has for its purpose the elimination for Federal aid for highway construction, will be combated by able speakers. The continuation of Federal aid for the Western States will be urged by every good-roads booster present. It is known that Harvey M. Toy, chairman of the California Highway Commission, is strong for Federal-aid allotment to the various States as a stimulant for the upbuilding and maintenance of a great cross-country highway system. Without Federal aid, highway construction in the West would not make the rapid strides as enjoyed today, it is pointed out by highway builders.

The week's events are held under the direction of the San Francisco group of Western Construction Equipment Distributors. The executive committee in charge of the week consists of Edward R. Bacon, president of E. R. Bacon Company, Charles A. Spears, manager Spears-Wells Machinery Company, and P. H. Curtis, business manager of Western Highways Builder. Tracy W. Harron, president of Harron, Rickard & McCone Company, is chairman of the finance committee.

SHOW BROUGHT WEST

The All-Western Road Show is the result of determined efforts to bring the annual road show, usually held in Chicago, to the West. These efforts had their climax last January when a delegation of westerners waited upon various committees in charge of the show and conventions in Chicago, and urged that San Francisco be chosen as the place for the 1926 show. The committee and its demands were ignored, but there was such strong sentiment in the form of resolutions from the various chapters of the Associated General Contractors, several associations of Supervisors, good-roads bodies, and dealer organizations, that manufacturers could not overlook the popular demand for a good-roads demonstration in this section. It was accordingly decided that the work of organization be started and the success met with would determine to what extent the East was justified in supporting the western show. Enthusiasm in the West immediately became so high that it was soon found that the exposition auditorium was far too small to hold the conventions and show, and the management began casting around for a suitable site for this purpose.

Approximately twenty-five acres in the Marina section, only two miles from the Civic Center in San Francisco, was decided upon and work immediately began in grading and conditioning the property for the show.

USE FIVE TENTS

Exhibition-space orders began to pour in as the various conventions took shape, and more and more canvas was added to house the exhibits, until 140,000 square feet were provided for. Five big tents will house the exhibits.

Weeks before the show was scheduled to open the committee closed the space application books, notwithstanding the fact that inquiries and orders continued to pour in.

The show will open as the largest exposition of road-building machinery, appliances and equipment ever before offered the public, developing from its original purpose of a road show into an immense western road-building demonstration. The attitude of the general public in its interest to road building is reflected in the eagerness with which officials of State, counties and municipalities have interested themselves in this demonstration. Ten thousand road builders are going to attend the conventions.

An unusually interesting feature of the show will be a series of working demonstrations of various road-building machines. Ten acres have been set apart for the use of shovels, graders, rollers, pavers and such equipment. Many of these models have never been shown in the West before.

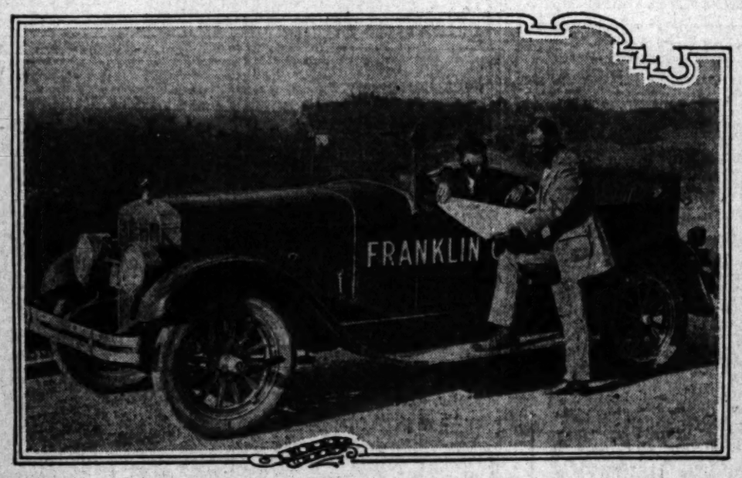
The transportation section will hold the largest display of road-building trucks, hoists, dumps and busses ever assembled before for this purpose. This section represents every make of truck which is now sold in the West, and many advanced types of machines from the engineering departments of some of the leading manufacturers are arriving for display at this time.

The Bureau of Public Roads, which has charge of the Federal aid fund, has shipped a carload of models which will be displayed in the form of panels representing individual phases of road-building engineering. These will be set up in the Convention Hall and connected with power, so that miniature models of engines and automobiles approaching grade crossings will warn the spectators on the subject of proper grade-crossing construction. Other panels will illustrate the results of research from the engineering division of the bureau on problems particular to western road builders. Drainage, elevation, paving types and technical engineering data collected for the West will be offered to the study of western road builders.

This is the largest and most complete exhibition ever offered by the Federal government and, because of its application to western conditions, it is believed it will be a feature of the week's entertainment.

County officials will have an opportunity to study and compare the various types of machinery and equipment at the big gathering. There will be as nearly a 100 per cent representation of standard and special equipment as has ever been shown, and much of the equipment will be demonstrated under its own power.

Checking Route Before Record Run



"Howja like to go for a ride?" asked Rupe Larson of Frank Newkirk, type-sticker in The Times composing room. "Fine!" said Frank, and then plans were completed for him to accompany Larson on a fast hop to Salt Lake and return. That it was fast is attested by the Western Union time stamps which shows Larson drove the Frankhlin Camel III, the Ralph Hamlin advertising car, for a new time from Salt Lake here—846 miles in 22 hours and 14 minutes. Newkirk has all the fast riding he wants for a few days.

Fire Firm Head is Visitor on Pacific Coast

J. M. Alderfer

J. M. Alderfer, president of the India Tire and Rubber Company of Akron, O., who came west to attend the annual conference of Pacific Coast India tire dealers, which was held in San Francisco, is spending a week in Los Angeles before returning to the factory. He is the guest of Frank T. Price, president and general manager of Nelson & Price, Inc. said to be the largest distributors of India tires in the United States, and Joe Schiller, manager of the Southern California branch of the India Tire and Rubber Company.

Mr. Alderfer presided at the meeting in the North, and told the dealers about general conditions in the tire industry, prophesying that there would be a sharp increase in tire prices in the near future. He advised them to be ready for any emergency that might develop in the coming months.

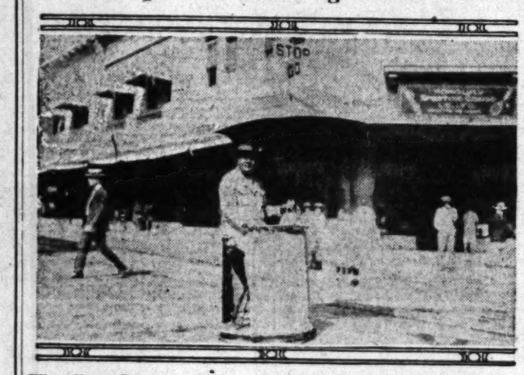
Another interesting point brought out in Alderfer's discussion of the tire situation is the increasing use of Indias in the commercial field. Busses, stage lines and commercial houses who own large delivery fleets are employing India heavy duty tires in large quantities, according to Alderfer. He stated that the India Tire and Rubber Company had introduced a new type of twenty-six pneumatic casings for this heavy duty traffic and also has a new tube that is heat proof.

"My trip to California's southern metropolis was largely for the purpose of learning first-handed tire conditions here," said Alderfer. "Of course, from a pleasure standpoint, I wouldn't want to miss seeing Los Angeles while on the Coast, but my particular mission here was to gain data to distribute to dealers throughout the country."

TIOGA PASS CLOSED

Snow has fallen in the high Sierras and Tioga Pass is closed with a fall of twenty-four inches on the summit, states a bulletin from the touring bureau of the Automobile Club of Southern California.

This Cop Has "Sitting-Down" Job

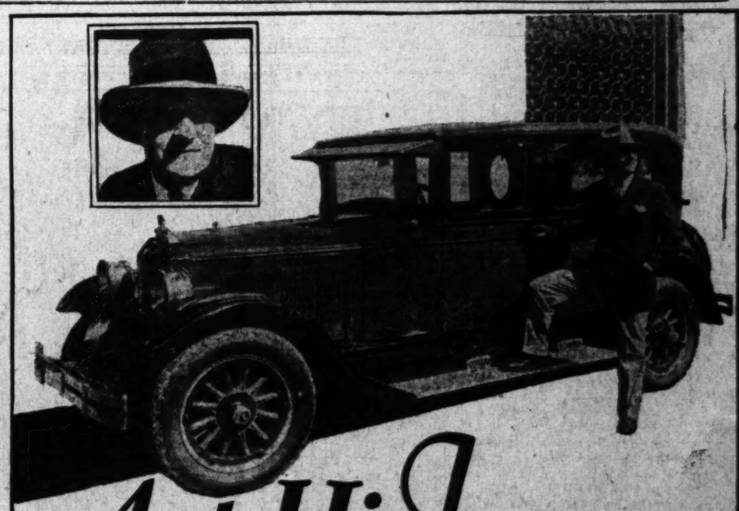


When Harry Bunce, well-known advertising man, returned from Honolulu a few days ago he bought numerous pictures of the island metropolis with him. The traffic cops there have a pretty easy job, says Harry, and he produced the above photograph to prove it. Not only does he have a stool on which to sit while directing the traffic stream, but an umbrella protects him from the weather—rain or sun.

TELLS OF VALUE OF RECORD TRIPS

In discussing the value of the recent spectacular feats of automotive endurance and speed Earle C. Anthony, president of the distributors of Packard for California pointed out the importance of such records to the average motorist.

"Anything," said Anthony in part "that helps to prove to the motorist that the modern automobile has built into it the precision of a fine watch and the stamina of a battleship does a great service, not so much to the automobile industry as to the motorist himself. A cross-country run in remarkable time under adverse conditions, is of little value, however, unless the public looks beyond the merely spectacular side. Back of the Packard eight, in the case of Lieut. Leigh Wade's trip, is the integrity of Packard engineering, and twenty-five years of transportation service. Although no motorist would ever consider an attempt to duplicate Wade's 4000 mile run, nevertheless the knowledge that a car similar to his own, built in the same plant by the same men, without the terrific strain of 165 hours of continuous driving, not only adds to the pride of ownership, but gives a comfortable assurance of reserve power ready to serve in time of need. This reservoir of energy is of utmost importance, and in the case of a physician it may mean the difference between life and death.



Art Hickman says—

"I've driven Buicks for seven years—and know nothing about them. For that reason I intend to keep on driving them for the the next seven years. If my Buicks ever had any troubles they never confided them to me. I like an automobile with that sort of reserve about it."

America's Demand for this greatest of Cadillacs at new low prices
Exceeds all Previous Cadillac Popularity

The wonder is not that Cadillac is so fine and so good, but that such fineness and goodness are now procurable at the low prices of the new 90-degree Cadillac.

That nothing mechanical can be finer than Cadillac is not alone traditional among those who know fine cars. It is also clearly provable in terms of engineering and manufacturing limitations and material specifications.

Never more obviously than now has Cadillac proved its right to the title, Standard of the World.

But those who have enjoyed the Cadillac supremacy of the past have always expected to make a higher initial investment for the added years of comfort and security, the greater measure of care-free, golden miles.

Today, in the new 90-degree Cadillac, production skill has achieved the seemingly impossible. For Cadillac quality is greater than ever before, but you can now secure a beautiful five-passenger Cadillac Brougham at a list price of $2,995.

Throughout the United States, a tidal wave of Cadillac approval attests public recognition of the supremacy of Cadillac value.

If demonstration determines your choice, you must choose the new Cadillac.

Prices range from $2995 for the Brougham to $4485 for the Custom Imperial. F.O.B. Detroit. Tax to be added.

The new low (GMAC) financing rates are available to those who wish to purchase the new Cadillac out of income.

SALES SCHOOL OPENED HERE

Many Young Men Enroll for Instruction

Star Organization to Train Personnel

Educational Course Offered by Factory Branch

With a large enrollment, the educational division of the Durant Motor Company of California has opened a fifteen-weeks' sales and service educational school at the corner of Washington and Figueroa street, one of the greatest strides ever taken by a manufacturer to develop new sales force material.

While some of the enrollments came from within the huge Star Motor Company factory branch organization in Los Angeles and Hollywood, a number of the students are from outlying towns and the majority are made up of men who never before have had sales experience.

FITE HEADS CLASS

The "school" experienced one of the most successful openings ever held by a similar movement, Friday night, its first meeting. Heading the huge class is Robert P. Fite, salesmanager of the Los Angeles Star factory branch and recognized as one of the most capable sales executives on the Pacific Coast. Assisting him in the school, as he assists the direction of Star sales activity in Los Angeles, is Charles D. Waller. The opening of the school was also attended by Raymond Boyd, manager of sales promotion, who was instrumental in the original promotion of the Durant and Star educational course.

The school is based fundamentally on this course, which has gained national prominence through its adoption by the New York University and by Durant Motors, Inc., for use in its entire territory.

Students are taken through the fundamentals of selling step by step throughout the course, and through the direct opening of a school by the Los Angeles branch as an individual, students in this course will be given an opportunity to apply their knowledge directly to the sale of merchandise as they are in the course of instruction.

APPLIES INSTRUCTION

The plan was worked out in detail by Fite and H. W. Curtis, director of sales and branches of the Durant Motor Company of California before its announcement. Once enrolled as a student, the embryo salesman becomes practically a "junior salesman" and as he applies his instruction to actual selling practice, he is given 50 per cent of his earnings during the period of the course.

The Star Motor Company of California has undertaken the task of placing this vast army of men as they are graduated from the school. In graduation, the student will be given a diploma from the Durant organization, his examinations being passed by high executives of the company. After the course is completed, the students will be placed, some in executive positions and others, who have not yet mastered the details of work in an organization the size of either Durant or Star companies, will be enrolled as full-fledged salesmen, as their ability will rate their future standing with the company.

LEADS ALL DEALERS

The Los Angeles Star branch has become widely known in the past six months. During each month of the half-year period, the local branch has led every other Star and Durant dealer in total sales, throughout the country. From this organization have been promoted thirty-one men "from the ranks" into executive positions at other points, as well as within the local branch.

Features of the school will also include a mechanical exhibit of the integral working parts of modern motor cars, a working motor being included among the exhibits. The school is located directly opposite from the Star branch, on the northwest corner of Washington and Figueroa streets.

Queen Maud of Norway has a decided inclination toward writing and not only has finished one novel, but is working on a second.

Auto Replaces Dobbin in Livery

Not so many years ago a livery was where you rented a horse or team and went for a drive with your best girl behind animals that didn't need much attention. Today the auto livery has taken its place, particularly in the cities. Here we have Alfred Asher of the Ford Auto Livery taking delivery of an Overland sedan from K. Chandler, salesman for the Sonoma Motor Company, Willys-Knight and Willys-Overland, dealers.

WOULD CANCEL DRIVER'S LICENSE

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

PHOENIX, Oct. 31.—City Magistrate Hugh Callahan has made the first application under the new State auto law for revocation of the driving license of an individual whom he had fined $100 for driving while drunk. The judge expresses the opinion that the best way to curb reckless driving is to take the driver's license away, something that may be done under the new statute.

TRUCK WINS FRIENDS

"That the new one and a half-two-ton model Ruggles truck, which arrived in Los Angeles just a few days ago, is going to be one of the most popular models on the market is evidenced from the warm praise it received from the scores of 'truck-wise' men who gave it a thorough inspection this past week," says Lester Poyer of D. F. Poyer & Son, Ruggles truck distributors at 324 East Sixth street.

Rent Autos Increasing in in Popularity

"With more and more people renting cars these days, the auto livery business is growing by leaps and bounds. For the most part, people who patronize these firms demand late model inclosed cars that can be secured for a nominal rental,' says Gustauve Krakauer, president of Sonoma Motor Sales Company, Willys-Knight and Overland dealers at 639 South Wall street.

"This accounts for the increase in the number of de luxe Overland sedans we are selling to automobile rental companies throughout Los Angeles. People who rent cars do not want to spend any more than they have to, though they want the comfort and riding qualities of high-priced machines.

"Recently we sold Alfred Asher of the Ford Auto Livery at Sixth and Flower street, two de luxe Overland sedans. Mr. Asher tells us that ever since he has owned these cars, they have been in constant demand and are actually booked up for several days in advance."

Future Travel to Be in Air is Prediction

That the transportation of the future inevitably turns to air routes was pointed out yesterday by Harold L. Arnold, Lincoln dealer. The present tremendous increase in the use of automobiles with the attendant traffic congestion, the expense of building new roads and widening existing ones, together with the increased upkeep cost per mile, are all factors which will accelerate air transportation development.

Large steps have already been taken in this direction by the Ford Motor Company, which recently purchased the holdings of the Stout Metal Airplane Company, and began a program of development which will, Arnold believes, bring the all-metal type of airplane into general use.

"To anyone who travels our boulevards on Sunday it is obvious that something must be done to relieve congestion," said Mr. Arnold. "One way is to build more roads and make both new roads and existing ones double width. When this is done, there should be a minimum speed of thirty-five miles per hour placed on the inner section, and a maximum speed of thirty-five miles per hour on the outer section.

"This plan will permit rapidly moving vehicles to pass each other and to overtake and pass slowly moving vehicles without danger. It is a fact that doubling the width of a road increases its carrying capacity about four times; that is, four times as many cars will pass a given point per hour.

"Our chief trouble with present boulevards lies in the fact that not everyone cannot or will not travel at the speed limit. Without means of passing these slow machines, others must be limited to the speed of the slowest.

"It is my belief that with air transportation we could have each of our 110,000,000 people in the air at once without the slightest confusion or congestion. It is obvious that surface travel is limited to one 'layer,' while in the air layer may be stacked upon layer over the entire surface of the earth, the only limits being the safe flying distance between planes above and below, and the 'ceiling,' of limit of altitude to which the plane will climb. For this reason I believe the Ford industries are contributing more toward the freedom of man than any other institution in the world."

TO DOUBLE PLANT

In a great many cities men in the tire business are asking: "What about next year? Will business continue to be good or is it time to become conservative?" The General Tire and Rubber Company contributes an interesting and practical answer to this question by letting a contract this week for two more additions to the factory. One will be an extension to the present main building and another a wing to the south. Construction will begin at once. When these extensions have been completed General will have doubled its plant area in a period of about three years. The immediate effect will be to increase factory production capacity about 50 per cent.

OPEN SALESROOM

A fine new sales establishment has just been opened by [illegible] kavsky Motor Company, [illegible] Dealers, at 222 North [illegible] avenue. The salesroom and [illegible] ice department are arranged to give a maximum of convenience to customers, and are located in the heart of the residential district, one of the busiest boulevards in the city, according to Lukavsky.

STUDY TRAFFIC

In every city of North and South America, Europe and [illegible] of Asia, the modern problem of traffic is being intensively studied. The system of traffic [illegible] with start and stop signals, "one-way streets," "no left-hand turn" corners, traffic towers with [illegible] and "speed boulevards" are being tried out in all the large cities of the world.

No Starch Needed in These Casings

"You don't need any starch in those tires," said S. V. Jefferies, driver of the Crown Laundry [illegible] car to E. A. Fowler, wholesale representative for the Western Auto Supply Company. Jefferies is speaking of the Western Giant cords with which his car is equipped. Other Crown cars have [illegible] equipment that their drivers say is giving satisfaction.

Proving AUBURN Claims

Comfort—Flexibility—Power and Endurance are the high points demonstrated in this punishing test given the Auburn. The car used was an absolutely stock model Straight Eight Auburn Sedan, taken at random from regular production at the factory and without the alteration of a single unit.

Constant Check Made During Record Run

Auburn dared to announce this test in advance. As a result unofficial observers were on hand by thousands along the route, while official observers and representatives of leading newspapers accompanied car and driver throughout the record-breaking trip.

Prove Auburn claims to Your Own Satisfaction by driving any model Auburn you may prefer —Six or Eight. If the car does not sell itself we will not ask you to buy.

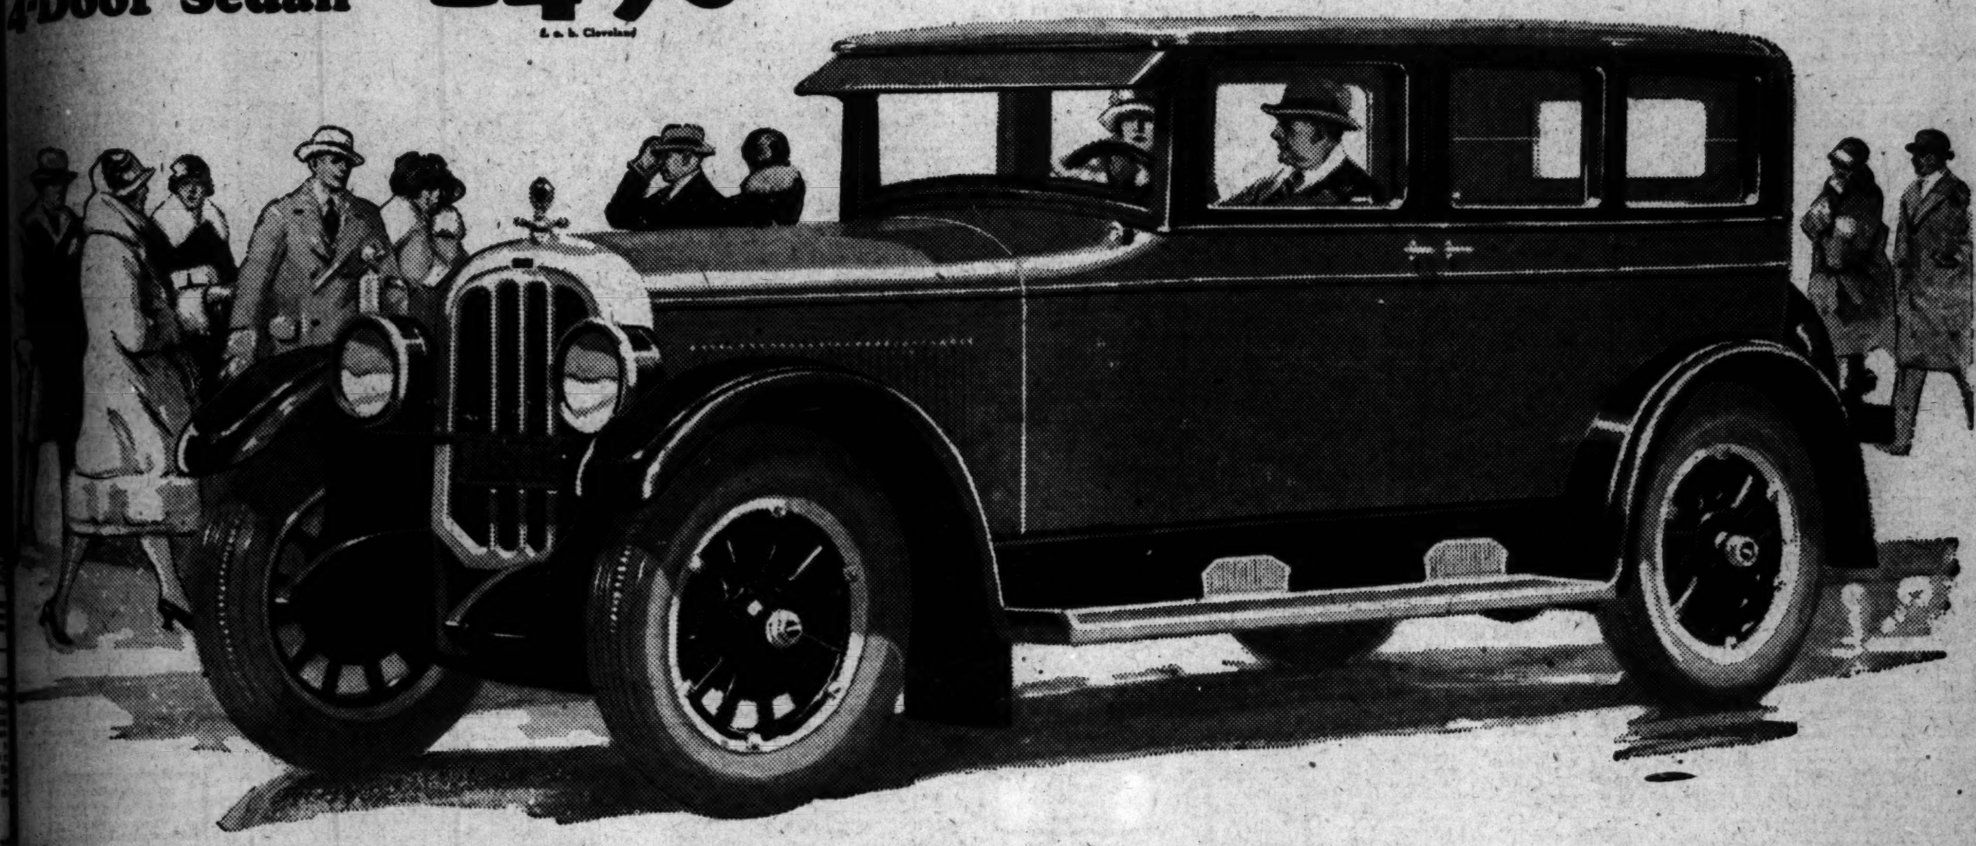
20th Century 4-Door Sedan $1490

f. o. b. Cleveland



Today's Leading Value In All Four Ways!

Low Price

A richer, finer Chandler, and reduced $505 in price—that, briefly put, is the two-fold appeal of the new Chandler Twentieth Century Sedan—a magnificent 4-door Sedan priced less than a 2-door Coach.

Thus quality now talks price! Chandler has gone considerably farther than the rest of the industry in reducing prices. The average reduction on the new Chandler closed car models is 19%, whereas the average reduction on all other closed cars stands at only 8%.

Chandler's new Metropolitan Sedan De Luxe, now $1795, and the new Seven-Passenger Sedan, now $1895, are both reduced $400. The new Brougham, at $1695, is reduced $350. Chandler open car prices are lower by $100 to $140. All prices f. o. b. Cleveland.

Advanced Body

A typical example of Chandler progress is the new Twentieth Century Sedan. It is an important development in modern coachbuilding—a distinct attainment of higher ideals in all phases of beauty and comfort.

The lengthy sweep of its lines, its distinguished radiator design, the mellow richness of its finish, the luxury of broadcloth upholstery—attraction upon attraction and advantage upon advantage are making this new Chandler the pronounced favorite of its price class.

Perfected Chassis

Here, too, is a major factor in Chandler value. The Chandler chassis is unique in strength and balance. It has been constantly refined and improved, until today it is recognized as an outstanding accomplishment in chassis engineering.

It is to this exceptional chassis that Chandler owes its road-holding sureness at high speeds, its buoyant riding smoothness, its effortless ease of steering.

Pikes Peak Motor

Great in so many things, Chandler is greatest in performance. Chandler power has won for Chandler a long string of brilliant records—the latest being the recent winning of the annual automobile race to the summit of Pikes Peak, 14,109 feet above the sea—in which race Chandler broke all records on the world's highest automobile climb!

This and many other similar contests have proved again and again the supremacy of Chandler power, carburetion, braking, steering and cooling.

In price, body, chassis, motor—in the four fundamentals of automobile value—Chandler leads its field. Make your own comparisons. Spend an hour examining the new Chandler—and another hour driving it—and you will hardly be content with anything else!

THE CHANDLER MOTOR CAR COMPANY CLEVELAND

CHANDLER

EXHAUST SMOKE

By Roy A. McMillan

It's too bad Fred Schreiner, Hudson and Essex dealer, doesn't have a lot of other old acquaintances like Floyd E. Mangus. Floyd and Fred used to work for J. W. Leavitt in the days when the city speed limit was fifteen miles an hour and they sold Overlands together. Olive street then was the smart auto row of the city. Now Floyd is associated with Cliff Durant in the planning of Luna Park, formerly the Selig Zoo, and Fred is still with his old love—selling automobiles.

Floyd wanted a car the other day. He knew Fred was selling them and so he looked him up, bought a Hudson unsight and unseen just for old times sake, and is now driving it. Fred wishes there were a lot more of his old tillicums in the market for cars—and would have the same idea Floyd had.

Talking about pioneers in the business recalls the fact that E. R. Barnett, who sold automobiles here almost in the "dear dead days beyond recall" is back in the garden again — this time as a Chrysler dealer. Walter P. was in knee pants when E. R. first sold cars. He is located at 451 Roxbury Drive.

C. Wardrop MacFarlane was so saturated with the lore of Death Valley and so interested in writing about the interesting trip we made, that he forgot to include in it that at Randsburg a pleasant man, who introduced himself as the vice-commander of the local post of the American Legion, gave us figures and facts to the effect that the district of which Randsburg is the hub produces a lot more than gold and silver. A well-known kitchen abrasive, medicinal salts, table salt and a host of other things that Mother Nature holds are mined near Randsburg.

There are two prospectors who make Shoshone their headquarters who went potatoless for a couple of weeks. Within a few miles of there ye saw a gunny sack in the road. It was obvious it had something in it. A halt and examination disclosed about thirty pounds of spuds. Inquiry in Shoshone disclosed the fact that the two men had left that morning to do some assessment work—to be gone two weeks—and that the Murphys were a part of the stores. They had evidently jolted out of the flivver soon after they started.

He is receiving the congratulations of his friends on the new position.

ROAD COMPLETED

The road between Lompoc and Harrison is now completed and paved, with the exception of a small detour, .2 of a mile in length due to bridge construction, two miles north of Lompoc, according in the touring bureau of the Automobile Club of Southern California.

Old-Timer Back in Harness Again

Al G. Faulkner was in the automotive business years ago when cars were berated by drivers of teams and the motorists given cussings. Now he is back again—this time as a metropolitan dealer for the Hudson-Essex. He was appointed by Walter M. Murphy as a city dealer and the photo shows him and Mr. Murphy at the end of the confab which has resulted in the formation of Al G. Faulkner, Inc.

VET DEALER BACK TO HIS FIRST LOVE

Al G. Faulkner is New Hudson-Essex Dealer; Named by Murphy

When Al G. Faulkner started in the automobile business—that was in the olden times, long, long ago—there weren't any gasoline propelled cars; they were all steamers. Since that time a great deal of water has passed under the bridge; countless gallons of gasoline have been burned in the business of motor transportation.

Recalling the old times of motordom and the fact that Mr. Faulkner is one of the real veterans of the industry, Walter M. Murphy, president of Walter M. Murphy Motors Company, yesterday announced the appointment of Al G. Faulkner, Inc., organization as the latest metropolitan dealer of the Murphy Hudson-Essex chain of dealers in Los Angeles.

Connected with many of the most important activities of California for many years, having been active in politics and also having taken a keen interest in motor-car racing, in addition to his motor car merchandising activities, Mr. Faulkner is well known throughout the State. His taking on of the Hudson-Essex line has created much comment among his many friends on "Auto Row" and congratulations have been extended on every hand as to his selection of the fast-selling Hudson-Essex line as his latest sales medium.

Mr. Faulkner, president of the incorporation which bears his name, has arranged for sales and service headquarters at Grand avenue and Seventeenth street. The opening will take place Monday.

"Mr. Faulkner has not been active in the automobile business for several years since he severed his connection with a well-known motor car distribution," said Mr. Murphy, "and since that time has been prominently identified with sports activities. He has been interested in both the speedways —Beverly Hills and Culver City—and at the present time is a director of the Olympic Auditorium."

OILING DIRTY JOB

"There isn't a motorist today who enjoys lubricating a motor car manually with an oil can or a grease gun. At best it's a dirty job," says J. A. Carlin, vice-president of the W. P. Herbert Company, Chandler and Cleveland six distributors. "Because the 'one-shot' lubrication system on the latest Chandler and Cleveland models absolutely eliminates the necessity of manual lubrication, hundreds of motorists are being attracted to these two automobiles."

"TRACKLESS TRAIN' USES PNEUMATICS

Local Officials Take Big Interest in Tire Performance

Of particular interest to the Southern California truck, bus and stage lines, which are its acknowledged progenitors, is the tire equipment of America's "first trackless train," which motored into Los Angeles from New York a few days ago.

According to H. O. Bock, manager of tire sales for the local branch of the United States Rubber Company, the tires on the unique cross-country express are the same United States truck-bus pneumatics used so extensively throughout this section on trucks and stages.

"It will be remembered," says Mr. Bock, "that the United States Rubber Company was a pioneer in perfecting the pneumatic truck tire widely popular today. Because they act as cushions between the load and the road surface and cannot injure the highway, this trackless transportation is uniquely signalized by this motorized train."

When "Bill" Parsons, well-known automobile race driver, who engineers the trackless train, stopped it in front of the tire company's building on San Pedro street, he was most enthusiastic in his praise of the United States pneumatic equipment to J. B. Magee, manager of the tire company's branch here. In all the 11,000 miles traveled since the cross-country express left New York they have not had a particle of tire trouble, Parsons said. And he declared that he had guided the train over a lot of road that was certainly not of Southern California highway caliber.

Construction of homes and automobiles in this country has caused a demand for window glass that is making Belgium factories fall far behind orders.

They Get an Eyeful From the Rear Platform

When the "trackless train" was here a few days ago Los Angeles branch officials of the United States Rubber Company enjoyed a brief visit on the observation platform. They had more than a passing interest in the "train" because it was equipped with United States truck-bus pneumatic tires. Left to right, those on the "observation" platform are J. B. Magee, branch manager; H. O. Bock, manager tire sales, and P. G. Gergen, office manager.

NEW PRODUCT HERE

Declared to be a carbon remover that is bound to become popular Adams Carbon Remover Tablets have been introduced to Los Angeles by the Ruth Sales Company, 1850 South Western avenue. Instead of dropping them in the gasoline, as many other preparations are made for, these are put in the cylinders through the spark plug holes. It is claimed for them that when three are put in each cylinder, the tablets disintegrate under the heat of the motor and release small amounts of oxygen, which unites with the carbon heat. After fifty miles driving, it is said, the carbon is removed.

PAYS FOR LAWNS

Widening of the Whittier Boulevard, in Los Angeles county, has necessitated the rebuilding of irrigating systems, replacing hedges, lawns, and driveways for which the California Highway Commission has appropriated $2500 to cover its share of the cost.

FRANKLIN

Stock Touring Breaks Record

SALT LAKE CITY TO LOS ANGELES

Elapsed Time: 22 Hours, 14 Minutes. Distance: 846 Miles
Elapsed Time Average: 38.1 Miles Per Hour.

This new mark by the absolutely stock Series 11 Franklin (except for top removed) is 1 hour and 29 minutes faster than the previous down mark made by a car not strictly stock, so the Franklin now holds the fastest time marks, stock or non-stock, in either direction, as last year a stock 10-C Franklin touring made the up record, Los Angeles to Salt Lake City.

The car checked out of the main office of the Western Union at Salt Lake City at 5:04 A.M., Mountain Time, October 26th, and checked in at the main office of the Western Union in Los Angeles at 2:18 A.M., Pacific time, October 27th. The point to be remembered is that it was stock—did not have sharpened cams, larger valves, special oiling system, gasoline pumps or other devices such as some record breakers in the past have used.

It did not take the Silver Lake cut-off, eighty miles shorter, but traveled the full distance by way of Goffs. Frank Newkirk of the Los Angeles Times was observer.

The record breaker is now on display!

THE BRAKE SHOP

This shop makes a specialty of careful and correct brake adjustment.

Your car should be carefully inspected every thirty days and your brakes tested. A nominal charge is made for each adjustment, and if The BRAKE SHOP relines your brakes monthly checking and adjusting are done without charge.

YOU OWE YOURSELF THIS PROTECTION

1. Do your brakes squeal?
2. Do you skid your rear wheels when bringing car to stop?
3. Have you noticed that the brake on your right rear wheel seems to take hold more quickly?
4. Does your right rear tire show evidence of far more wear than the left tire?
5. Do your brakes grab or seize when you have made a heavy application?
6. Does a sudden application of your brakes cause the car to swerve to one side?

If your car does any of the above mentioned little things then your brakes are out of adjustment.

It does not necessarily mean that you should have your brakes relined, but for your own protection you should have the brakes carefully adjusted.

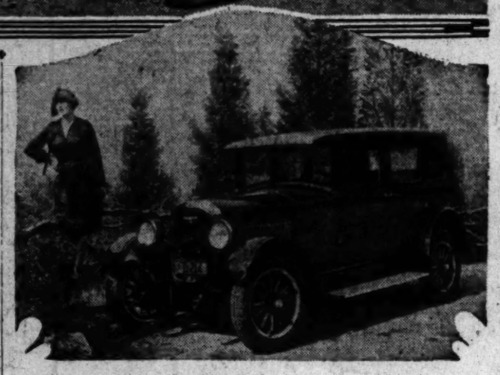
Here Are New Hupmobile Six Models



Hupmobile six models arrived at the Greer-Robbins Company last week and today are being inspected with interest by motorists. Above are two models of the new product, the top picture being a touring car with Juno, the big elephant at Luna Park, formerly Selig's Zoo, giving it the once over. Below is a sedan in Pasadena.

NEW HUPMOBILE SIX HERE

Latest Product Culmination of Tests Since 1914; Resembles Eight in Appearance

Hupmobile's new six-cylinder car is announced here today by Greer-Robbins Company, distributors with headquarters at 1509 South Figueroa street. The new Hupmobile six is said by P. H. Greer to be a culmination of tests with six-cylinder motor cars first begun by Hupp in 1914 and which have continued unceasingly the last two years. More than a dozen six-cylinder types have been built and scrapped in the effort to achieve results finally secured in the six now announced, Mr. Greer declares.

Those who obtained private view of the car before the public showing scheduled for today, declare that it is a fit companion car for the Hupmobile eight, which has been creating a sensation throughout the country since its announcement some months ago.

"It is not unlike the eight in appearance," says Mr. Greer, "but it is enough different so that it is a distinctive car from every viewpoint. The four-door sedan and the touring car are the only models to be had at present.

SMOOTH IN OPERATION

"The Hupmobile six is amazingly smooth in operation and wonderfully smooth as to its riding qualities. Balloon tires and snubbers take up all road shocks so that the back-seat passenger rides in comfort over any kind of roads.

"And because of the brilliant engineering ability of Hupmobile engineers, this six can be driven smoothly all day long practically at top speed. It does its work right up to maximum without engine labor.

"Features of the car include an absolutely water-tight, one-piece windshield that can be raised or lowered by the turn of a handle to afford ventilation, unusual gasoline and oil economy, four-wheel brakes of the same type that have become famous on the eight, high-pressure lubrication, and compactness for handling in traffic and parking."

PLAN LARGE OUTPUT

Mr. Greer says that the factory is providing for the largest output of cars in its history as indications point to a reception for the six that is destined to be second only to that given the Hupp eight last January.

"We believe this new six is squarely in line with the public's conception of a modern, up-to-date motor car," continued Mr. Greer. "It will be economical to purchase and operate. It will stay out of service stations. The touring car weighs only 2620 pounds and the sedan but 2800.

"Bodies are finished in Duco of a new ocean-green color with darker green belt and black upper body, adding another touch of distinction. Touring-car upholstery is genuine Spanish leather of mottled-gray pattern to harmonize with body color. Sedan upholstery is gray brougham cloth. Seats are both wide and deep with a natural restful color.

"The emergency brake has been placed out of the way on the left of the drive so that only the gear-shift lever remains in the center and this comes through the floor far enough forward so that it does not interfere with the foot-room in the front compartment."

BUY MUCH STEEL

The steel purchased by General Motors each year is equal to 100 train loads of eighty-three cars each. As Chevrolet is the largest of the General Motors units, a large percentage of this material is used in Chevrolet construction.

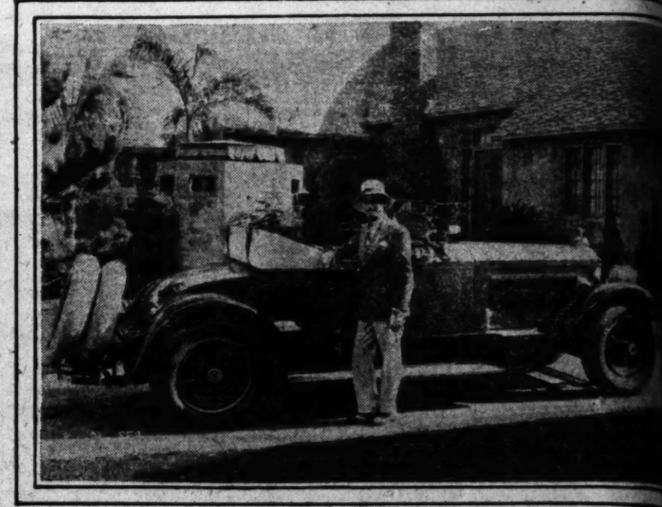
Buick Output to be 200,000 Cars for Year

With production steadily keeping up at a rate of almost 23,000 cars per month, the Buick Motor Company will close the year of 1925 with a total of 200,000 cars built during the year. Instead of slackening with the approach of fall, the big Buick plant at Flint is steadily turning out 875 cars every working day in an effort to catch up with the accumulated orders held by Buick dealers in every quarter of the United States.

"Though it has been almost three months since the new Buick models appeared, the utmost efforts of the factory have not been sufficient to meet the demand for the new cars," said H. W. Tuttle, assistant manager of the Los Angeles organization of the Howard Auotmobile Company. "It is almost unprecedented in the automotive industry to enter the last months of the year with such a production as Buick is building, and it certainly affords a real tribute to the new Buick line."

The 1926 production at the Buick plant has been tentatively set for 225,000 cars. From present indications, there will be no let-up in the present capacity output straight through the winter months. As a consequence Buick will probably this year show a more uniform production record straight through an entire year than has yet been achieved by any of the big producers."

Lew Is All Dolled Up for a Ride



Lew Cody has on his nice new trousers and white gloves and everything, as the photograph a ride in his nice new Packard and its two extra balloon tires. The setting is said by publicity man to be Lew's new Hollywood home. Yes, he's a motion-picture actor and at Loew's State Theater in "An Exchange of Wives," beginning yesterday.

HERE'S LAW THAT IS BROKEN DAILY BY MOTORISTS

An interesting light was shed on one angle of the downtown parking problem yesterday at the downtown showrooms of Stanley W. Smith, Inc., retail dealers for the Hudson-Essex in Los Angeles and Hollywood, when W. J. Bedwell, manager of sales, won a friendly argument with F. E. Carley, manager of service.

The argument circled around the old question of just what a motorist "A" should do to a second motorist "B," who has just slipped in from behind into a parking space just vacated by a third motorist "C"—after motorist "A" has awaited for sometime to the front of the space for motorist "C" to vacate, planning to back into the space, following "C's" departure.

Carley insisted that no treatment was rough enough for the motorist slipping in from behind and stealing the "hole" as he termed it. Bedwell on the other hand claimed Carley was all wrong, and that the motorist awaiting in front of the space, although minus a place to park, has no bowl whatsoever.

Here's Bedwell's contention:

"The motorist who waits in front of a parking space for another motorist to vacate, planning to back into the 'hole,' violates an ordinance in that he halts his car on a major traffic lane, blocking traffic. He violates a second ordinance when he backs into the 'hole' in that he backs up on a major traffic lane. On the other hand, the motorist coming in from behind violates neither."

Carley retorted: "Perhaps you're right, but just let anyone try and 'steal' a parking space from me by slipping in from behind, and too, just let anyone try to get into the parking space of average size downtown without backing up on a major traffic lane."

Bedwell admits that his is the strictly technical analysis of the thing and ventures that most motorists would violate the ordinances and string with Carley.

Makes Plea for Observance of Traffic Rules

"As the number of motor cars on the streets and highways of the nation increases, it behooves good citizens, a majority of whom are motor car owners and drivers, to be particularly observant of traffic regulations," says Herbert E. Woodward, president of the Reo Motor Car Company of California.

"In the past there have been a good many people who would have disobeyed the average local ordinances no sooner than they would have committed a crime of major importance, but who have regularly sidestepped traffic rules without a twinge of conscience. It was just sort of a game, and most offenders, when caught, paid their fines with a laugh and admitted the joke was on them.

"But now that the number of motor cars in service has increased to such a great extent, it is vitally important that traffic regulations be observed. With law and order governing their operation, there is almost no limit to the number of cars that can be accommodated on the rapidly multiplying good streets and roads. Without orderly driving, the limit will be reached in the very near future.

"In the same way, it is of utmost importance that traffic legislation be sensible, and that all regulations set up be practicable and not necessarily stringent. Many people blame the existence of crime partly to the great number of laws that have been created only to be half-forgotten and never enforced. They say that such laws 'rob' all other legislation of much of its power, and pave the way to what we know as crime waves."

BIG STAFF TESTS CARS

The General Motors proving ground at Milford, Mich., contains 1125 acres and a staff of engineers is constantly at work testing every known make of cars. These cars, as well as Chevrolets, and other General Motors cars, are driven ceaselessly until they break down, which gives Chevrolet engineers careful analysis of materials that are best suited for general automobile use.

FREAK CAR BODIES MUCH IN DEMAND

Applying practical body-building methods to individual ideas of what each owner wants or thinks he wants is more of a problem than most people probably believe.

Robert Thompson says he writes some strange orders in a course of a year's time.

"Motion-picture companies come in with the most grotesque ideas for converting an automobile into some sort of camouflaged vehicle that will fit into their screen stories," said Thompson.

"Sometimes they want a boat, or possibly a sort of modernized Cinderella's coach, or perhaps a kingly carriage with scrolls and curves and embellishments that no sane king would be seen occupying.

"But, of course, these jobs are exceptions. Most of our work is along the line of designing and building bodies that afford roominess, comfort in combination with that hand-finished smart appearance that has never yet been copied in a volume factory."

BRIDGE PLANS ARE APPROVED

Tall Structure Design for Colorado River Indorsed

Board Reserves Right of Inspection

Is Regarded as Link in More Direct Route to Phoenix

The California Highway Commission, it is announced by Commissioner Nelson T. Edwards, has approved the plans of John Lyle Harrington, an eastern bridge designer, for the construction of a toll bridge over the Colorado River near Blythe, Riverside county, connecting California and Arizona at the present crossing of the Ehrenberg ferry.

The approval has been given, the commissioner said, subject to the right of California to inspect the detailed plans when they have been prepared and upon condition that the bridge will be built upon an adequate foundation as future borings and investigations may show to be necessary.

The last session of Congress passed an enabling act permitting the construction of a toll bridge at this point, provided the plans and specifications were first approved by the highway departments of the States of California and Arizona. After an investigation of plans of the bridge promotors by its engineering department, the California commission has given its consent to the building of the bridge.

In view of the fact that the bridge, if built, may at some future time become the property of the State, the California commission proposes to investigate fully the final plans and to keep in close touch with the construction work. This right was reserved in the resolution of approval.

The proposed bridge connects at the California end with the Mecca-Blythe highway and is on what is described as a direct route between Los Angeles and Phoenix, the capital of Arizona.

The California Highway Commission has rejected bids received recently for the grading of the Mecca-Blythe highway from Arrowhead Boulevard to Blythe, a short section of highway near Blythe. The work will be readvertised at once.

Here's Latest Member of Exclusive Club

When L. N. S. Klaesson, shown on the left in the above picture, ordered his third Chandler the other day from the W. P. Herbert Company, Chandler and Cleveland distributors, he also became eligible for membership in the more or less exclusive 100,000-Mile Club. It is composed of Chandler owners who have driven their cars 100,000 miles. He is shown here with his latest purchase and the one of three other Chandlers he has used in the past few years.

Distributor at Factory to Get More Cars

When Jack P. Horning packed his bag and hopped a train for Elkhart, Ind., last Monday, it was with a determination to get what he went after.

It is not very long since it was announced that Mr. Horning had become California and Arizona distributor for the Elcar and since then he has worked for its place in the sun that he thinks it deserves, so well that he was faced with a shortage of cars.

Letters and telegrams to the factory brought polite replies—but no cars.

So Jack packed his extra pair of socks in a bag, stuck a clean handkerchief in his pocket and betook himself to Elkhart.

If he doesn't get some more cars it is because they aren't to be had, he said before he left.

PLAN TO BUILD FOUR RACING CARS

A quartet of zippy little "baby" Duesenberg straight-eight racing cars with a piston displacement of but ninety-one and one-half cubic inches will be built by Fred S. Duesenberg in his racing and stock-car factory at Indianapolis for appearance on the speedways during 1926. Peter De Paolo, who, at the wheel of a Richfield-powered Duesenberg straight eight, swept forth to a championship this year, will "captain" the team, driving car No. 1.

This was the news brought to Los Angeles yesterday by Wade Morton, veteran racing pilot, who now has quit the racing business and holds the title of sales engineer for the Duesenberg passenger-car organization.

GET CLOSED-CAR COMFORT

It is now possible for touring-car and roadster owners to enjoy closed-car comfort at very moderate prices, it is claimed. The recent price reductions as quoted by the Rex Manufacturing Company are possible only by greatly increasing their production. This company is at present the largest builder of automobile inclosures in the country and Rex inclosures are indorsed by almost all automobile manufacturers. These sliding glass inclosures are strongly built, but light, adding only seventy-five pounds to the weight of the average touring car.

OPEN CARS CAN BE MADE STORM-TIGHT

Summer has definitely departed and many open-car owners are dreading the discomfort of winter driving during storms.

"There is not much enjoyment to be got out of riding with a cold wind flapping the side curtains and the rain leaking through," says Mr. Kron of the Southwestern Corportation, distributors of Rex insures. "But in these days the difficulty can be avoided without diminishing the pocketbook to the extent of a new sedan or coupe.

An enclosure made especially to fit different models of open cars will serve the same purpose much more cheaply. The inclosures render the open car absolutely weather proof, add greatly to its appearance, and the big advantage is that the added weight is about seventy-five pounds.

Qualities by Driving Cars 100,000 Miles

Automobile clubs are not, generally, exclusive. The owner of the popular "flivver" is just as welcome and as eligible as the possessor of the most costly car.

There is, however, at least one very exclusive club for motorists, an organization which has no counterpart in the world. This is the Chandler 100,000-Mile Club, consisting of those Chandler owners who have driven 100,000 miles or more.

"hTe Chandler 100,000-Mile Club was organized three years ago," says J. A. Carlin, vice-president of the W. P. Herbert Company, Chandler and Cleveland six distributors, "and despite the limits set on membership, it already shows an enrollment of 187 Chandler owners. These include two who have driven their Chandler cars more than 300,000 miles each; one who has already passed the 250,000-mile mark; seven who have exceeded 200,000 miles and thirty-five who have passed the 150,000-mile mark. Of the total membership, eighty-one have established their mileage records driving a single Chandler, while the remainder have driven two or more Chandlers in excess of 100,000 miles.

"The club headquarters are at the Chandler factory in Cleveland, and numbered among its membership are Chandler owners in thirty-two States, in Mexico, Spain and Brazil. Each member carries on his radiator the club emblem in blue enamel on a white background, and every one is a Chandler enthusiast. Included in the club roster are several Angelenos, among whom is L. N. S. Klaesson, of the Witmer Hotel, who has just been admitted to membership, having recently passed the 100,000-mile mark in three Chandler cars.

"Mr. Klaesson has long been a Chandler enthusiast," says Mr. Carlin, "as is attested by the fact that he has just taken delivery of his fourth Chandler, a 1926 metropolitan sedan de luxe."

Ford Output Hits New High on October 16

The Ford Motor Company reached the highest production peak in the records of the company October 16, when 8165 cars and trucks went off the assembly lines of domestic branches. This record, however, is expected to be short-lived, for production will reach 8800 daily before the end of the month, making possible a total output of approximately 200,000 for October, the greatest in Ford history.

This information was contained in a statement issued at the company's general offices, which details the remarkable industrial accomplishment effected in producing the improved Ford cars, and which at the same time definitely dispels all fictitious rumors regarding Ford production, circulated since the new cars were announced.

"Less than sixty days after discontinuing its former style passenger cars, the Ford Motor Company has brought the improved types into normal production in all its assembly plants throughout the United States," it was stated.

"The former type passenger cars went out of production in August, during which month 4616 passenger cars were produced.

"Because of the many changes and improvements made in Ford bodies, it was necessary to rearrange departments in all assembly plants, install considerable equipment and lengthen paint ovens to permit longer baking and an increase in the number of coats of paint given the cars. This was accomplished and production started in the plants early in September.

"Aside from the engineering work, the task of producing the improved cars involved in part the preparation of tools for 8291 new operations, necessitating more than 3,000,000 hours of work by expert tool makers, complete changes of whole departments, the installation of 1074 new machines in the Highland Park and River Rouge plants and in other manufacturing units, the designing and making of 903 new and different small tools totaling 75,800 pieces and the educating of thousands of men in making new automobile parts."

TAKE NEW LOCATION

Kaufman Motors, Inc., dealers in Hudson and Essex motor cars, have established a second location at 1707 Sunset Boulevard. Their present store is located at First and Bailey streets in the Boyle Heights district. The new expansion was announced following the tremendous growth in sales volume in Hudson and Essex motor cars experienced within the past several months and the demand for another store at the Sunset Boulevard location.

15 to 17 miles per gallon of gasoline

Moderate purchase price—surprisingly low upkeep cost

It is quite natural that a well built car would cost less to maintain. Indeed less maintenance cost is in itself a proof of good building. Where lighter construction might quickly show the effects of road punishment, the finely constructed Series 80 is seldom out of order. It is built for many years of dependable, carefree service. Those occasional normal attentions, which every motor car requires, are done in less time and at greatly reduced cost, because of special high-speed tools and machines.

Resort Notes

Palm Canyon and the desert gateway village of Palm Springs are drawing their devotees earlier and in larger numbers than in past years, it is indicated by the recent opening for this season of Palm Springs' beautiful new hotel, the Oasis. This hotel, which artists have called "a desert dream," has been made more than ever a dream of beauty by the work which has been carried on in the last few months. The Persian swimming pool, surrounded by orange and oleander trees, has been completed and extensive planting of the grounds is being carried out under the direction of Lloyd Wright, the landscape architect. In the beautification of the grounds, the old fruit trees planted on the property when it was a pioneer homestead have been carefully preserved.

Another added feature at the Oasis is the conservatory lobby, opening into the dining room. This lobby will be heated with old Spanish type braziers, which will be well remembered by those who visited the hotel in its first season. Pictures of these braziers have already been sent all over the country by guests and the idea has been adopted for use in many beautiful gardens.

OASIS DELIGHTFUL

The Oasis enjoyed a very successful season last winter although not completed and opened until quite late. Many prominent eastern families who spent last winter in California spent week-ends at this new place of rest and enchantment, while others found it so delightful as to cause them to spend practically the entire season in this vale of desert sunsets and balmy air.

Increased interest in the unique beauty of Palm Canyon and its surroundings promises to make Palm Springs a winter resort of the first magnitude within a very few years, and to this end the opening of such a hotel as the Oasis is expected to contribute greatly. The aim of the owners and management very clearly has been to create a thoroughly native and characteristic atmosphere, something truly Californian yet more than dimly reminiscent of Egypt and Arabia. This artistic conception has been carried out with such feeling as to make a strong appeal to those who love the distinctive.

Will R. Conway, owner of the Barbara Worth Hotel in El Centro, is constructing a gymnasium of good size in his popular Imperial Valley hotel, to be equipped with modern appliances. The gymnasium will be for the benefit of his guests. Also a Turkish bath will be added in the near future.

REFURBISHES HOTEL

Mr. Conway recently redecorated and furnished the Barbara Hotel, spending a large sum in the improvements, one feature of which is a mammoth lobby rug nine fifty-three by thirty-three feet and weighing about one ton.

The exquisite murals in the lobby all have been retouched, and are attracting considerable attention.

The opening of the winter season in the Barbara Worth was celebrated there recently with a formal dinner party.

A new Topanga Canyon resort known as the Horseshoe Bend Inn, situated in that canyon seven miles from the ocean, was opened to the public recently by A. C. Gustavus, owner of the new resort.

A dance hall, dining-room and picnic grounds have been constructed. A number of cabins also have been built.

MT. WILSON GUESTS

During the past week the guests registered at the Mt. Wilson Hotel and cottages included E. B. Edner of Los Angeles, who goes to that mountain resort periodically to enjoy the peace and quiet found there, particularly at this time of the year.

Miss D. Myrtle Harwell of Los Angeles entertained Miss Margaret J. Hamann of Hermosa Beach over the week-end.

R. H. McKee and wife from Seattle enjoyed a few days' rest at the hotel. Mr. McKee, who was formerly connected with the United States Geological Survey as an engineer, hiked over to Barley Flats and secured some excellent specimens of the large cones of the Colter pine.

Visions of eastern winters will rise at Lake Arrowhead when the Thanksgiving holiday week-end comes around. Bob sleds, skis and ice skates have been received for the snowy days by Lake Arrowhead Lodge, which is making preparations for guests.

LINCOLN

We are extremely gratified at the increasing enthusiasm for the Lincoln car and the service that is behind it. The beauty of the Lincoln custom-designed body types we have on display might perhaps mislead anyone who had not inquired of us as to the cost. That the cost of a Lincoln is not far higher is because facilities and resources of the Ford Motor Company have been available to its production. These have made it possible to advance the standard of quality to the highest peak without establishing prices which would make ownership of this finest of cars an extravagance. We invite your early inquiry.

Our proposition to you is this: Drive the Hupmobile Eight for an hour or for a day.

Drive it as you've never dared to drive any other car. Try it for all the usual things—speed, pick-up, braking and so on.

Then go ahead and do all the things you've always wanted to do, but never have tried because you felt they weren't fair to the car.

We ask you to do this because we know you'll believe your own experience—when words would leave you cold.

We know the Hupmobile Eight. We know that it speaks to an automobile driver in the most convincing terms.

So we ask you—will you make this test, and let your own good judgment tell you that the Hupmobile Eight is the one car above all others that you want to own?

And remember this—everything the Hupmobile Eight shows you, is built in there to endure, because that is the way Hupmobile builds.

We invite all women to take the Hupmobile Eight for an hour or a day and do their own driving.

This Is His First Automobile!

If for no other reason than that the car he is pictured with is his first, R. C. Knox, a postal inspector, wins the right to have his picture in the paper. His first car, as can easily be seen, is a Jordan line eight from the Lord Motor Car Company.

Wife Confirms Judgment in Choice of Car

Some interesting sidelights have been disclosed in recent sales of the new Jordan line eight from the Lord Motor Car Company. In one case the purchaser had never owned a car before.

R. C. Knox, postal inspector, with headquarters at the Arcade Station, and a resident of Pasadena, picked his very first automobile directly from the eight-cylinder class, without making the usual steps up through fours and sixes.

Mr. Knox explained the absence of a car in his home all these years by the fact that his work required such continuous travel that he had never had time to learn to drive a car of his own, although he had covered a good many thousands of miles in other men's cars.

"I admit I was not qualified to compare mechanical details of various makes, but I formed my own impressions of comfort, appearance and performance, and that is why the Jordan appealed to me from the first. So I put it up to Mrs. Knox to confirm my choice."

It did not take Mrs. Knox long to make up her mind, for she immediately approved the five-passenger, all-steel observation sedan, and the sale was closed promptly. Both she and Mr. Knox are now learning to drive.

TIRES FACE MENACE

"Nails, spikes and other discarded mechanical parts strewn along the highways are becoming more and more a menace to motorists. These things all represent trouble in the shape of tire punctures, causing delays, additional expense and considerable inconvenience to motorists," says C. Fred Thompson, head of the firm which bears his name, distributors of McClaren tires. "In first designing the McClaren Autocrat Cord and balloon tire, its designers anticipated this problem. The design and toughness of the tread, plus the extra heavy, thoroughly frictioned carcass, reduces and practically eliminates punctures.

OFFER MOTORISTS AID

Except during actual danger period, the Arizona Highway Department has available at all times a large truck for towing and transporting cars across the Gillespie Dam, on the Yuma-Phoenix route, via Bankhead Highway, according to recent information received from the touring department of the National Automobile Club. This service is free to the traveling public. The disjance between Yuma and Phoenix is approximately 204.56 miles and the average driving time between these two points is seven hours. From Yuma to Ligurta is rough; Ligurta to Wellton, fair; Wellton to Aztec, Sentinel, Piedra, Gila Bend to Gillespie Dam, excellent; Gillespie Dam to Hassayampa River, gravel surfaced-excellent; Hassaympa River to Phoenix paved.

NEARS COMPLETION

Construction of 7 1-2 miles of rock road over the Mountain Springs Grade in Imperial Valley is nearing completion, according to the touring bureau of the Automobile Club of Southern California.

WITH THE CHECKER PLAYERS

BY JOHN DOUGHERTY
November 1, 1925

Checker and chess headquarters, 921 Union League Building, corner of Second and Hill streets. All checker and chess players invited to join.

All communications intended for this department should be addressed to John Dougherty, The Times, Los Angeles, Cal.

AMONG THE FANS

The tourney for the Pacific Coast championship to be held in San Diego, December 9-15 will be held on the double knock-out plan, the same as the American championship tourneys are held. Six games will constitute a sitting and one has to be defeated twice before being eliminated from the tourney.

The plan is to hold the tourney on the two-move restriction style of play and all sittings played to a decision on that style. No change will be made from the above unless a majority of the players present at the meeting to be held prior to the opening of the tourney vote in favor of a change.

Julius D'Orio has announced that he will act as referee and not enter the tourney, but it is hoped he will reconsider and be one of the contestants.

If Mr. Banks is out here at that time arrangements will probably be made for him to give a simultaneous checker and chess exhibition in San Diego some time during the tourney week.

The exact date of N. W. Banks's arrival in our midst has not yet been announced, but he will be along this way in about a month. Clubs desiring to secure his services for checker and chess exhibitions should write the editor at once.

The best 50 cents worth of checker literature that has been put on the market for some time is the Gonotsky vs. Ginsberg Match Games book just published by F. R. Wendemuth. The book contains a photo and biography of each of the contestants and the thirty games are profusely and ably annotated by the winner of the match, S. Gonotsky.

The September number of the A.C.M. just received and, as usual, Mr. Teetzel has taken pains to entertain his readers with all the checker news as well as lots of interesting games and problems. If you are not already a subscriber, $2 sent to M. D. Teetzel, P.O. Box 1028, Kansas City, Mo., will put you on the list.

Whenever talk of a checker tourney comes up in this section of the country, an argument is started on what style of play should be adopted. When it comes to checker championship tourneys, I do not think that at present any should be considered but the two-move restriction style, as that is the recognized style, the world over, at the present time. A championship at any other style means nothing at this time. The go-as-you please style was discarded years ago and the eleven-man ballot style is still in its infancy and, as yet, has few followers. What standing it may have a few years hence may be another as both Banks and D'Orio are working hard to have that style recognized.

One argument put forward for the eleven-man ballot style is that it puts the naiural players more on a par with the book player, but it would be just as consistent to insist that golf players use broom handles instead of golf clubs. At school we used to play "one old cat" but, while we used a baseball and bat and played on a regular baseball diamond, you would hardly call it a baseball game. I have always insisted that the eleven-man ballot is a separate game from checkers, just the same as "Spanish pool," Polish, French and Italian checkers (or draughts) are different games from what we understand by "checkers."

I enjoy playing any of the above games, but when I think of a checker champion I think only of one who has gained his laurels across the board by the two-move restriction style of play.

WHO IS McHARDY?

Since the publication of "McHardy's Relative Positions," many have written asking "who is McHardy?" After getting Mr. McHardy into a corner and subjecting him to the "third degree," I am able to give out the following: He was born in Aberdeen, Scotland, and in 1886 was runner-up to George Reay for the Aberdeenshire championship and in 1887 he was returned the winner. Shortly afterwards he came to this country and from 1892 to 1896 was located in Washington, D. C., and he and W. B. Mundelle alternated with the championship of that city during his stay there. In 1896 he went to Quincy, Mass., and was identified with the Boston players until about 1900. During his stay in Boston he played with Barker, Heffner, Parrow, Grover and others who have done much to make checker history.

Along about this time he decided to follow Horace Greeley's advice—"Go West, young man, go West"—and he turned his face toward the setting sun and gave up checkers entirely until he arrived in Los Angeles about four years ago. Shortly after coming here he became interested in problems and "McHardy's Relative Position" is the result of his labors.

This game was published in this column July 22, 1923, as Game No. 1506 and given to correct Lee's Guide. It was later published in "McHardy's Relative Positions" as Problem No. 51 and credited to the editor and Mr. McHardy. After publication Mr. M. D. Teetzel called our attention to the fact that the latest edition of Lee's Guide gives it in their appendix credited to W. J. Wray in 1903.

In looking it up we find Mr. Wray's play the same as variation 3 in this game and should be so credited. The trunk and variations 1 and 2 are original so far as we know at this time. Anyone having seen them published before will confer a favor by writing in.

Photographs Show Details of Car Making

The marvels of modern automotive precision and production methods are depicted in a series of forty-two enlarged photographs now being shown to the public at the salesrooms of all Los Angeles Chevrolet dealers. The photographic series covers the same interesting operations in the manufacture of Chevrolet cars which would be shown a visitor at the factories.

One of the most spectacular pictures shows a huge drop-forge hammer weighing 140,000 pounds. Hammers of this type are used to make the Chevrolet chankshaft. The falling weight is a three-ton block of steel, which is lifted by steam. It is so responsive to the touch of the skilled operators that they are able to place a watch on the bottom die block and strike it with the hammer so delicately that the crystal remains unbroken. Each hammer will forge 850 crankshafts during a ten-hour day.

Other striking features of the exhibit are pictures of a monster machine which uses 300,000 amperes of electricity to weld the Chevrolet one-piece banjo-type rear axle housing; a machine which drills thirty-two holes simultaneously in the bottom of the Chevrolet cylinder block; a rotary milling machine which finishes at one operation the lower sides of six cylinder blocks, and a sixty-two-ton press which forms a Chevrolet fender at one stroke.

The individual grinding of valves, the delicate balancing of pistons so that every piston in each motor weighs the same, and many interesting micrometric inspections also are illustrated in the remarkable exhibit.

TRACE AILMENTS TO HARD RIDING

Some physicians agree that the spinal column is the center of the human nervous system, that more disorders are traceable to the spine than to any other one part of the body, and that as a result, the human back needs more protection.

Statistics show that more back trouble has been developed since automobiles became almost indispensable than ever existed prior to that time, but to offset that, the decline in spinal disturbances started when automobiles began to be made more comfortable riding.

"Shock-checking devices are given credit for the decline in back troubles," says Harry S. Mason, general manager of the Electric Equipment Company, Southern California distributors of the new Stromberg supershock absorber.

"Now we have a shock-absorber that not only checks recoil, but equalizes all riding strain on the passenger of the car. It is so constructed that after once adjusted and installed on the car it never needs any further attention."

Truck Driver Has a Lot of Easy Chairs

The driver of this Gotfredson truck, carrying a load of overstuffed furniture, has a pretty soft seat, not nearly so much so as those he has for a load. The truck is used by the Standard Company of Los Angeles and is employed constantly in transporting their products.

Something New!

Flint Cabriolet

Abundant, Flexible Power

The new Flint Cabriolet is a positive stimulant to jaded motor senses. Its beauty is so striking that everywhere correct people comment on its smartness. At the wheel, you are master of smooth flowing power which responds without seeming effort on hill and straightaway.

The clean-lined custom built Cabriolet meets the most exacting closed car requirements. With rear window open and club seat in use, it converts into a four passenger roadster.

The Flint Cabriolet is now on display. Your immediate inspection is invited. Open evenings and Sundays.

Use Automobile as Salesroom

This handsome new Ajax sedan is being used by air officers in their canvass of the city to dispose of tickets for the Armistice Day Sky Carnival at Clover Field for the benefit of the Army Relief Fund. It will also be given away as part of the program that day.

PEERLESS TO ADD MODEL

Details Will be Announced Next Week by Local Distributing Agencies

During the past few weeks rumors to the effect that Peerless is about to announce a brand-new model have been widespread, and have evinced much interest among automobile men. Confirmation was had from Clair R. Savage, sales manager for J. W. Leavitt & Co., Peerless distributors, but details about the car could not be learned.

"National announcement of the new Peerless will be made in about two weeks," said Savage. "Until that time, we are authorized to give only general information.

"The new car will have a six-cylinder engine capable of a wide range of speeds with easy acceleration. It will be in a size and price class never before entered by Peerless, and it will mark the first time that the public has been able to buy a car in this class, which is manufactured by an old established firm with a long record of quality production to its credit.

"We are assured by the factory that the new Peerless will be a quality car throughout. The fine workmanship and engineering which have been responsible for the success of former Peerless cars will be continued in the new model.

"The new car will not supersede the present models of the Peerless company. The present six and eight will continue to be manufactured; the new car will be a fit running-mate for them and will in no way interfere with the markets of these other models.

"The factory is making every effort to enable the dealers and distributors throughout the country to have a complete stock of the new models on hand when the national announcement takes place."

Shop Believed 10 Years Ahead in Its Plans

Officials of the J. V. Baldwin Motor Company, Chevrolet dealer at Fifteenth and Figueroa streets, believe the shop department is a replica, so far as arrangement is concerned, of the shop of ten years distant.

One department of the shop known as the blue ribbon room is used in the repairing of complete units such as rear end or motor overhauling. An overhead track transports the motor from the outside repair stalls to the various dismembling stations, big presses, lathes and benches. A feature of the blue ribbon room is a breaking-in" machine where the motor is run under a high-pressure of oil for a considerable time after the overhauling has been completed, thus insuring complete service.

Believe Gas Price Not to Take Boost

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

REDLANDS, Oct. 31.—Gasoline users of this county, and that includes practically everyone except the halt, the lame and the blind, according to the automobile dealers, who say there are few families who do not have cars now, are very much encouraged over something that happened in the county during the week. The County Supervisors secured bids on gasoline from the various corporations and the price was so low that it indicated there will be no sudden jump in the price of gasoline within a year at least.

Two corporations bid 14 cents a gallon on the furnishing of the county with 100,000 gallons of gasoline, which is about what it takes to run all the trucks and the machines used by the county.

The Standard Oil Company was awarded the contract to furnish 100,000 gallons at the figure. This is 4 cents below the market price and the bid contains a stipulation that should the price decrease the county figure will be reduced accordingly. Regardless of an increase, the maximum is to be 14 cents and those who say they know take it that this means no general increase for a year at least.

EXPORT DIRECTOR GOES ON LONG TOUR

In anticipation of an unprecedented spurt in the automobile business in Mexico, indicated by recent statistics, Edmund H. Serrano, director of exports for the Moon and Diana factories, left St. Louis last week for an extended tour of Mexico and Cuba, his itinerary including such cities as Mexico City, Vera Cruz, Tampico, Guadalagaja, Monterey and Havana, Cuba.

"The opening of the National Bank of Mexico on a sound basis has revived confidence, stabilized business and improved the outlook to a marked degree," said Serrano, just before his departure.

"Mexico is spending $40,000,000 for highways within the next few months, and this alone will be one of the greatest boosts for business that the country has known for generations. Labor is plentiful and cheap, the wages averaging about 50 cents per day, and material for road work is free."

OLD ORDINANCE MUCH OUT OF DATE

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

PHOENIX, Oct. 31.—Though 90 per cent of the garages here have acetylene torch equipment, it has been found that the city prohibits flames of any sort in such establishments. The City Commission has decided that the ordinance, like a number of others that were passed in the early days of motoring, is very much out of date.

Schools in Kern County Use 25 Busses

The various districts of Kern county now boast a fleet of twenty-five International coaches and busses for transporting children to consolidated schools, according to L. C. Lieber, motor-truck sales manager of the local International Harvester Company office. "A number of these busses have served through three or four entire school years with great satisfaction," said Mr. Lieber, in relating the success that the Kern county schools have had with International equipment.

"From the very first, these International school busses proved entirely satisfactory in their economy of operation and dependability in maintaining regular schedules throughout the school year. So when it was found desirable to add additional equipment from time to time, there was no hesitation in deciding in favor of more Internationals.

In certain parts of Europe it is no common sight to see girls herding ducks and geese.

Car Aids in Ticket Sale for Carnival

One of the new Ajax sedans is acting on downtown streets as the "salesroom" for tickets to the Armistice-Day Sky Carnival to be given at Clover Field on November 11 for the benefit of the Army Relief Fund.

Lieut. Horace S. Kenyon, Jr., commanding officer of the field and chairman of the sky carnival's executive committee, said yesterday that the attractive car was chosen largely for the notice it would attract on streets as officers in uniform drove from place to place selling tickets. As the car is a newcomer to the automotive field, it naturally excites a great deal of curiosity. Lieut. Kenyon believed it would prove a winner, and in that respect he said it was living up to expectations.

Another feature in regard to this Ajax sedan is that it will be given away at the Clover Field Sky Carnival. With the event designed to bring speedy aircraft into competition, the bombing of a European village and introduction of entirely new air tactics, Lieut. Kenyon ruled that as just one additional feature of the sky carnival, the Ajax sedan should be presented to some member of the audience.

The Ajax air recently made a new record to Albuquerque, N. M. beating the California Limited by two hours and one minute. Lieut. Kenyon said he expected it would set a new record in downtown ticket sales before the campaign draws to a close.

SHIPMENTS CATCH UP WITH ORDERS

For the first time in three months the Oakland Motor Car Company is now shipping a sufficient number of the new model Oaklands into California to enable those who have orders in for cars to get deliveries and it is stated by the local Oakland representatives that from now on deliveries can be made within a reasonable time after orders are placed.

"We have been swamped with orders for the new Oakland models since the day they were announced some three months ago," says H. E. Franklin, manager for Reeve Gartsmann, Oakland distributors, "and the factory have been straining every facility to increase production on these new cars. With the advent of winter in the East and the resultant slowing up of the demand for motor cars there, we are fortunate in being able to get greatly increased shipments and expect within a few weeks to be able to make deliveries a day or two after orders are placed.

ARIZONA GAS TAX IS TEMPORARY

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

PHOENIX, Oct. 31.—Unappreciated by most auto drivers, Arizona's 3-cent gasoline tax is a temporary measure, designed to return an overdraft of $1,550,000 to the State road funds. This result is to be accomplished within a few months, when the tax may have to be discontinued, for lack of authority for further collections. Thus a lengthy gap may be known before the assembling of the next Legislature, which is certain to re-enact the tax.

Construction on the Ventura River bridge at the north city limits of Ventura has been completed and opened to travel, according to a late report from the touring bureau of the Automobile Club of Southern California.

PEERLESS

"Peerless Has Always Been a Good Car"

In 1901 the first Peerless was built. It was a good car. It brought the engine out from under the seat and put it up front where it has been at home ever since. Later Peerless introduced side doors to take the place of the grand staircase effect at the rear which was then in vogue. The company also pioneered the four-speed transmission, the bevel-gear rear axle, etc. Now, in its twenty-fifth year, Peerless is still building good cars. The first six months of this year more Peerless cars were built and sold than during all of 1924. Right now Peerless deliveries in Los Angeles are limited only by the ability of the factory to supply cars.

Charley Likes This Car

Charles M. Schwab, steel magnate and director in many enterprises, has driven an automobile for lo these many years. He has had some of the most expensive cars made, but he likes his Stutz better than any of them. This photograph was made in front of his home after Mrs. Schwab and their niece, Mrs. Charles Neeland of Los Angeles, had returned from a ride. Of the car Mr. Schwab says: "I have never had a car that has given me such satisfaction."

QUESTIONS and ANSWERS

By Jonas W. Harris

Question: Would a genuine marine engine work well in a heavy automobile? If not, why not? Which is the most serviceable car for use over Tioga and Sonora passes? I have $4000 to put into a car that will do my work.

W. D. C.

Brighton avenue.

Answer: A "genuine marine engine" is built for sustained, full load service twenty-four hours a day and possibly month after month with practically no idleness. The automobile engine is built for high output of power, intermittently, and must have the minimum weight of metal per horsepower. This running as low, in some engines, as five pounds of engine per horsepower. Many marine engines run as high as 800 pounds per horsepower, in Diesel engines. Do not try to design yourself a heavy-duty automobile. Of the cars named I am inclined to recommend the eight cylinder. The car you have been driving is no longer built, but you will find the second car in the big model, which has the greatest power (except two others not named) of the American-made machines, will do your work. It is a multiple-valve engine and a wonderfully well-made car.

Q: Do you consider splash lubricating systems satisfactory? Do you consider split-skirt aluminum pistons as satisfactory as light gray castiron? Is an oil scraper ring of any real permanent use? Which cars of the three lists will give me the most economical service up here where gasoline costs 40 cents and lubrication oil $1.75 per gallon?

C. R.

Edmonton, Alberta, Canada.

A: Splash lubricating systems are not used to any extent on the better cars. Aluminum pistons are used by but few American builders and I believe it is safe to say that they are not used as much this year as last. I have never seen an oil scraper ring that was of any use at the end of a year's run, while properly lubricated common rings are good for at least three years' service. Class A, car two, is my first suggestion. I do not find anything I can suggest as satisfactory for your use in Class B, but of the list, No. 4 probably will give the greater service. In Class C, No. 9 will give the greater service in the long run.

Q: I am going to Detroit in a little over a month and intend to buy a car while there. Which of the four cars named will be the best car for my use? No. 1 does not have hydraulic brakes. Do you think it will be possible to have them installed after I get the car? I like No. 3, but am afraid of the high-speed motor Will it do my work?

R. O. H.

Mexico City, D. F.

A: There is no reason why you should buy car No. 1. It is not equal to No. 3, which is built with hydraulic brakes. So far as the speed of the engine in No. 3, it is practically of the same speed as No. 1, only 200 revolutions a minute faster, and is a higher-priced and better-built car than the one you are thinking of having remodeled. Under no circumstances buy a car and attempt to remodel it. No. 3 car is the best car for you named in the list.

Q. I am driving an —— six. It has gone about 25,000 miles. It is in good condition and has had the best of care. It has new rings, pistons, and valves, the cylinders have been reground. It is a 45-horsepower engine and will not make over 45 miles an hour. Where is all my power going?

J. W.

Tucson, Ariz.

A: Your timing is wrong. I suspect your lubricating oil is too heavy, the bearings, pistons and possibly the rings are fitted too tightly, and the carburetor you are using is one of the impossible contrivances which is no longer made. Have the ignition carefully timed by some one who knows. Check up the valve-timing. The exhausts should close about five degrees of crank travel past inner center. Get a carburetor without springs, valves and a lot of movable parts. The manufacturers of your old one are building a modern carburetor now.

A.M., West View street: Two hundred and fifty miles to the quart is proper lubrication for your car, and as you are using one of the best oils in proper grade, you have nothing to worry about. Drain every 1000 miles.

W.J.B., Long Beach: You do not state the name of your car, but I feel that it has thermoid universals and one of them, the rear, is out of order. Possible the shaft does not center properly. The engine you mention is a very good engine, one of the best medium-priced, but I do not see that it is any better than the engines in Nos. 2 and 3. I have no second and third choice, No. 3 car stands by itself.

R.E.S., Glendale: Your Oakland car has a Stromberg carburetor and you should not have starting trouble from that source, unless it is clogged or dirty. Have it cleaned and adjusted at a Stromberg station. It is easy enough to find the cylinder which is misfiring. Take out the plugs and the one which is oil moist and dirty is the bad one. Plugs should all be cleaned and adjusted to .025 of an inch. Clean the distributor and have the breaker points adjusted. I do not particularly recommend the oil you are using, so cannot advise any special grade. I consider the two western oils named quite similar, but not of approximate value. Do not use any heavy oil in your car. Use the lightest oil that will lubricate it. Your oils were not numbered.

T.M.W., Nogales, Ariz.: You cannot be a very observing auto fan if "all eights seem about the same" to you. You have named some eight in line and some V eights. I am satisfied that for a moderate-priced car you cannot do better than the first car mentioned. The second-named car is a handsome car and I like it. It will cost you more money than No. 1, but it is probably worth it.

R.P., Monrovia: The vibration point mentioned is natural and cannot be overcome. Drive either faster or slower.

B.B., Huntington Beach: My recommendation is No. 1 in the eight-cylinder class. It will not get loose and rattle by the time it is well broken in if you drive it right. The cars you have been driving would not "get too noisy" if properly cared for. Remember oil is cheaper than machinery and as a man must eat at close intervals so must a car be lubricated very frequently. A little oil often is better than a lot once in a while.

H. W. H., Simi, Cal.: I am satisfied you will get the best results if you buy No. 1.

H.L.L., Fargo street: If your work demands a hill-country machine do not attempt to rebuild an extremely light car into a "mogul." It simply can't be done. My advice is to get an automobile built for the service required.

Miss O.D., California Hotel: No. 1 in the six cylinder list and No. 2 in the four are probably the best of the cars mentioned, at least they will give good service, if properly driven and cared for. Get a sedan.

J. B. H., Applecrea, Cal.: The oil you ask about will give you much less carbon deposit than that which you are using. Clean your engine thoroughly, grind the valves and scrape carbon before making the change, then note the results. "There is a great deal of L.ink about oils" is a very correct statement of present conditions. I feel sure that you will like car No. 3 very much.

A.N., South Pasadena: No. 2 is a very fine eight, No. 3 is an eight which is making a fine showing for less money.

F.M.W., Anaheim: Car listed as No. 4 is so far ahead of the rest of the list that it is not in the same class. You will like it.

F.E.M., Bakersfield: Cars No. 2 and 4 will give you maximum service and minimum repair bills. Both have high resale value.

W.W.R., Eagle Rock: Car No. 1 will give you long and reliable service and it is not a garage man's friend.

W.D.B., Hayes avenue: I do not approve of either your first or second personal selections, but believe No. 3 sedan will be the best car for your use.

R.W.F., Glendale: As you are driving a No. 2 and it has given satisfaction why not buy a new one. They are better than ever. If you really wish to change carefully investigate Nos. 4 and 5. Both are good.

T.M.H., Bundy Drive: No. 5 is the outstanding car of the list. No. 1 in the heavier models will give years of heavy and satisfactory service. No. 4 for a light car is one of the best made.

E.C.F., Pasadena: Among the eights No. 1 is the best, in the list of sixes No. 4 is a very clever car, and one I can recommend. Use No. 3 gasoline and oil. You will be surprised at the improved results you will get. Do not buy "bootleg" gasoline at any price.

G., Miramonte: I would recommend that you buy a new car of the make you have been driving, as you know it is efficient, and the cost of upkeep is low. However, if you feel you must have a six your choice between Nos. 3 and 5 will give you what you need.

A.J.C., Santa Ana: I agree with you, the big heavy car is rapidly becoming obsolete, except for those who drive great distances and do not carefully have to consider the cost per mile. As checked in your list, No 3 will probably be the best car for you.

J. R.: My first, second and third choices for which you ask are Nos. 4, 6 and 5.

C. H., North Oxford Avenue: Any of the oils named are suitable for your Hudson sedan in medium or light medium grades. Car No. 1 is far sturdier and much longer lifed than No. 2. In fact, No. 1 is about the most serviceable in its class.

J. S., Hollywood: Car No. 4 will give you the best service of the group named.

H. B. W., Plymouth street, Long Beach: I advise you to specially consider cars Nos. 2 and 1.

A. I. F., Palmdale, Cal.: For a big, heavy, serviceable car No. 3 is a leader. No. 4 is a car that will give you wonderful satisfaction. If you like No. 2 you will find it a good car.

M. G. P., Marengo Street: My advice is No. 4 coach.

F. P., North Vermont avenue: Your requirements are so peculiarly severe that none but the most rugged and reliable material, design and workmanship can produce an automobile that will live up to your needs through a period of years that I am somewhat at a loss to decide from your list which car will be the best for you. No. 1 in the big model will do your work, No. 4 will give you great service and comfort but I am unable to positively state that it will stand up to your work. Penzoil is one of the best paraffin base oils.

MAKE PLANE FUEL OF CULL APPLES AND POTATOES

A hint of possibilities of development of satisfactory fuel other than gasoline, is given in the report of the flight of an airplane from Spokane, Wash., to Wallace, Idaho, a distance of ninety miles, while using an alcohol-base fuel made from cull apples and potatoes. The machine, a biplane, is said to have made the flight in one hour, carrying the pilot and one other man.

Here's New High-Gear Stunt

High-gear stunts have been featured for years by dealers who have sought the highways and by-ways for steep hills. But here's one that is different. Just to prove the efficacy of the Chevrolet in climbing, one of Baldwin's blue-ribbon cars was driven to the eighth floor of the Auto Center Garage at Eighth and Hope streets in high gear. When one considers that the turns necessary to reach that floor are even sharper than those encountered on a stunt hill, the feat is regarded as one that merits mention—and praise for the car.

Growth

A typical example of Graham Brothers remarkable progress in the truck industry was the month of September.

Production for this single month was 17 per cent og production for the entire year of 1921.

Astonishing growth, yet readily understood by owners, to whom Graham Brothers Trucks have brought vastly improved service simultaneously with a sharp reduction of costs.

OH, TO BE A CADDY ON A NICE GREEN GOLF COURSE TO DAY-

HEY! YOU LOOK OUT WHERE YOU'RE GOING -

LOOK AT THAT - LOOK AT HIM - DIDN'T LOOK TO THE RIGHT OR LEFT - JUST A ONE WAY STREET FOR HIM WHEREVER HE GOES - THAT'S THE KIND OF SLEEP-WALKERS WHO ARE ALWAYS COLLECTING ACCIDENT INSURANCE -

THERE'S BRAINS - STAND FOUR FEET AWAY FROM THE CURB LOOKING FOR A BUS THAT ISN'T WITHIN A MILE - GET BACK ON THE SIDEWALK!

SQUEAK

JUST THE TYPE - YOU BIG GOOF - WATCH WHERE YOU'RE GOING - ARE YOU DRIVING A CAR OR WINDOW SHOPPING?

BY GOLLY, CAN YOU BEAT THIS? EVERYBODY'S GOING WRONG TODAY. WOULD YOU KINDLY STEP ASIDE AND LET A FELLOW PASS? HEY!!!

BY GOSH, LOOK AT THIS ONE - ARE YOU ALL CRAZY TODAY? WHY DON'T THEY LEAVE THEIR CARS IN THE GARAGE UNTIL THEY LEARN HOW TO DRIVE?

BAM!

MORE CARELESSNESS - IF I WAS A JUDGE I'D SEND EVERY MOTHER TO JAIL THAT LET HER CHILD PLAY IN THE STREETS - IF I WASN'T WATCHING LIKE A HAWK I DON'T KNOW WHAT WOULD HAPPEN - LOOK AT THAT KID -

OH, HENRY, STOP THE CAR QUICK - I FORGOT MY LIP STICK -

WHAT?

SQUEAK

CREAK

RIGHT IN THE BACK END - I NEVER SAW PEOPLE THAT HAD SO LITTLE SENSE - THEY DON'T WATCH WHERE THEY'RE GOING - THEY'D COME RIGHT THROUGH THE BACK WINDOW OR THE WIND-SHIELD TO VISIT ME -

HEY!

WHAT TH - DON'T YOU SEE THAT STOP SIGN? WHAT DO YOU THINK IT IS? A JAPANESE LANTERN UP THERE TO DECORATE THE STREET?

IF YOU HAD TWO MEN HELPING YOU YOU'D HAVE ALMOST ENOUGH SENSE TO RUN A WHEEL-BARROW - SOME ENEMY OF HUMANITY MUST HAVE MADE YOU A PRESENT OF THAT CAR - I'D GIVE YOU A TICKET BUT YOU'D THINK IT WAS A CHRISTMAS GIFT CERTIFICATE AND GO DOWN AND TRY TO BUY YOURSELF A PRESENT WITH IT -

The Wonderful Stories of "OZ"

by L. Frank Baum

Ann's Army

"I won't!" cried Ann; "I won't sweep the floor. It is beneath my dignity."

"Some one must sweep it," replied Ann's younger sister, Salye, "else we shall soon be wading in dust. And you are the eldest, and the head of the family.

"I'm Queen of Oogaboo," said Ann, proudly. "But," she added with a sigh, "my kingdom is the smallest and the poorest in all the Land of Oz."

This was quite true. Away up in the mountains, in a far corner of the beautiful fairyland of Oz, lies a small valley which is named Oogaboo, and in this valley lived a few people who were usually happy and contented and never cared to wander over the mountain pass into the more settled parts of the land. They knew that all of Oz, including their own territory, was ruled by a beautiful Princess named Ozma, who lived in the splendid Emerald City; yet the simple folk of Oogaboo never visited Ozma. They had a royal family of their own—not especially to rule over them, but just as a matter of pride. Ozma permitted the various parts of her country to have their Kings and Queens and Emperors and the like, but all were ruled over by the lovely girl Queen of the Emerald City.

The King of Oogaboo used to be a man named Jol Jemkiph Soforth, who for many years did all the drudgery of deciding disputes and telling his people when to plant cabbages and pickle onions. But the King's wife had a sharp tongue and small respect for the King, her husband; therefore, one night King Jol crept over the pass into the Land of Oz and disappeared from Oogaboo for good and all. The Queen waited a few years for him to return and then started in search of him, leaving her eldest daughter, Ann Soforth to act as Queen.

Now, Ann had not forgotten when her birthday came, for that meant a party and feasting and dancing, but she had quite forgotten how many years the birthdays marked. In a land where people live always, that is not considered a cause for regret, so we may justly say that Queen Ann of Oogaboo was old enough to make jelly—and let it go at that.

But she didn't make jelly, or do any more of the housework than she could help. She was an ambitious woman and constantly resented the fact that her kingdom was so tiny and her people so stupid and unenterprising. Often she wondered what had become of her father and mother, out beyond the pass, in the wonderful Land of Oz, and the fact that they did not return to Oogaboo led Ann to suspect that they had found a better place to live. So, when Salye refused to sweep the floor of the living-room in the palace, and Ann would not sweep it, either, she said to her sister:

"I'm going away. This absurd Kingdom of Oogaboo tires me."

"Go, if you want to," answered Salye; "but you are very foolish to leave this place."

"Why?" asked Ann.

"Because in the Land of Oz, which is Ozma's country, you will be a nobody, while here you are a Queen."

"Oh, yes! Queen over eighteen men, twenty-seven women and forty-four children!" returned Ann bitterly.

"Well, there are certainly more people than that in the great Land of Oz," laughed Salye. "Why don't you raise an army and conquer them, and be Queen of all Oz?" she asked, trying to taunt Ann and so to anger her. Then she made a face at her sister and went into the backyard to swing in the hammock.

Her jeering words, however, had given Queen Ann an idea. She reflected that Oz was reported to be a peaceful country and Ozma a mere girl who ruled with gentleness to all and was obeyed because her people loved her. Even in Oogaboo the story was told that Ozma's sole army consisted of twenty-seven fine officers, who wore beautiful uniforms but carried no weapons, because there was no one to fight. Once there had been a private soldier, besides the officers, but Ozma had made him a Captain-General and told herself. "I don't wish to shed any blood, for that would shock my nerves and I might faint; but if we threaten and flash our weapons I am sure the people of Oz will fall upon their knees before me and surrender."

This argument, which she repeated to herself more than once, finally determined the Queen of Oogaboo to undertake the audacious adventure.

"Whatever happens," she reflected, "can make me no more unhappy than my staying shut up in this miserable valley and sweeping floors and quarreling with Sister Salye; so I will venture all, and win what I may."

That very day she started out to organize her army.

The first man she came to was Jo Apple, so called because he had an apple orchard.

"Jo," said Ann, "I am going to conquer the world, and I want you to join my army."

"Jo," said Ann, "I am going to conquer the world, and I want you to join my Army."

taken away his gun for fear it might accidently hurt someone.

The more Ann thought about the matter the more she was convinced it would be easy to conquer the Land of Oz and set herself up as Ruler in Ozma's place, if she but had an army to do it with. Afterward she could go out into the world and conquer other lands, and then perhaps she could find a way to the moon, and conquer that. She had a warlike spirit that preferred trouble to idleness.

It all depended on an army, Ann decided. She carefully counted in her mind all the men of her kingdom. Yes; there were exactly eighteen of them, all told. That would not make a very big army, but by surprising Ozma's unarmed officers her men might easily subdue them. "Gentle people are always afraid of those that bluster," Ann

"Don't ask me to do such a fool thing, for I must politely refuse Your Majesty," said Jo Apple.

"I have no intention of asking you, I shall command you, as Queen of Oogaboo, to join," said Ann.

"In that case, I suppose I must obey," the man remarked in a sad voice. "But I pray you to consider that I am a very important citizen, and for that reason am entitled to an office of high rank."

"You shall be a General," promised Ann.

"With gold epaulets and a sword?" he asked.

"Of course," said the Queen.

Then she went to the next man, whose name was Jo Bunn, as he owned an orchard where graham-buns and wheat-buns in great variety, both hot and cold, grew on the trees.

"Jo," said Ann, "I am going to conquer the world, and I command you to join my army."

"Impossible!" he exclaimed. "The bun crop has to be picked."

"Let your wife and children do the picking," said Ann.

"But I'm a man of great importance, Your Majesty," he protested.

"For that reason you shall be one of my generals and wear a cocked hat with gold braid, and curl your mustaches and clank a long sword," she promised.

So he consented, although sorely against his will, and the Queen walked on to the next cottage. Here lived Jo Cone, so called because the trees in his orchard bore crops of excellent ice-cream cones.

"Jo," said Ann, "I am going to conquer the world, and you must join my army."

"Excuse me, please," said Jo Cone. "I am a bad fighter. My good wife conquered me years ago, for she can fight better than I. Take her, Your Majesty, instead of me, and I'll bless you for the favor."

"This must be an army of men—fierce, ferocious warriors," declared Ann, looking sternly upon the mild little man. "And you will leave my wife here in Oogaboo?" he asked.

"Yes; and make you a general."

"I'll go," said Jo Cone, and Ann went on to the cottage of Jo Clock, who had an orchard of clock-trees. This man at first insisted that he would not join the army, but Queen Ann's promise to make him a general finally won his consent.

"How many generals are there in your army?" he asked.

"Four, so far," replied Ann.

"And how big will the army be?" was his next question.

"I intend to make every one of the eighteen men in Oogaboo join it," she said.

"Then four generals are enough," announced Jo Clock. "I advise you to make the rest of them Colonels."

Ann tried to follow his advice. The next four men she visited—who were Jo Plum, Jo Egg, Jo Banjo and Jo Cheese, named after the trees in their orchards—she made colonels of her army; but the fifth one, Jo Nails, said colonels and generals were getting to be altogether too common in the army of Oogaboo and he preferred to be a major. So Jo Nails, Jo Cake, Jo Ham and Jo Stockings were all four made majors, while the next four—Jo Sandwich, Jo Padlock, Jo Sundae, and Jo Buttons—were appointed Captains of the army.

Yes, next week tells of "The Departure From Oogaboo." And can you guess what funny sort of fruit grows on a Musket Tree? And what strange magic the Sorceress, Glinda, worked over Ann's army in order to prevent its entrance into the Kingdom of Oz? You musn't miss next week's installment.—The Editor.

I watched his face closely, for he had not observed me, and I thought it would do no harm; and then—well—you know I enjoy watching people when they do not know that I am watching them. His face was grim and firm, but suddenly a twinkle came into the eye beneath the half-lowered lids, the corners of the mouth turned up, and as the eyes moved slowly from one section of the comic strip to the other, catching the printed words and the little pictures which carried out the sense of the words, the twinkle grew, the little wrinkles beside the eyes came close together, the lids came down closer to meet the lashes below, the mouth took on more of the 360-degree angle, and the lips parted over the teeth; from deep within the cavities of the chest and ascending up through the throat and thence into that mystic chamber known as the mouth came a low rumble, which broke into a hearty peal of laughter and made one happy, as the sunshine makes one happy after the somberness of the oppressive fog.

MUSINGS OF JANE ON "COMICS"

Age 15 years

You know this morning, Harry, as I was making my daily three-quarters of an hour ride down to the office, I saw something which made me smile to myself; in fact, I believe there was something of a tiny chuckle escaped from between my parted lips and floated out upon the air.

Across the aisle from me sat one of those unusual gentlemen who, instead of having read the morning news at the breakfast table, with a piece of toast in one hand and a cup of coffee in the other, opposite a very sad-eyed wife, who tried to choke down a grapefruit which tasted like sawdust, instead of that this fellow read his current events on the jig-

Another Adventure Story by Aunt Dolly Today

"A VIRTUOUS THIEF"

BY AUNT DOLLY

(Here is another in Aunt Dolly's series of adventure stories, which are just a little different. Another one next week—Ed..)

Patrick O'Riley sat on the edge of Fisherman's Wharf considering many things. Among other things there were those problems of hunger and cold. Luck certainly was against him, he mused, for not a fisherman clambering up the rope ladders had cast him a dime. Instead, they hurried past, collars turned to the eyes, anxious to escape a high gale that swept in from the Farralones.

"It is a hard world and a bitter one," Pat said to himself as he made his way toward the "Glass House," a loosely boarded affair masquerading as a water-front cafe. Longingly, the boy pressed a cold pink nose against the spotted pane, then suddenly recoiled, his eyes round with wonder, as he beheld one Capt. Jose Vincillia sprawled at the counter, his fat face wreathed in smiles.

This discovery made, the boy placed himself within easy earshot of the captain's conversation, for, as he told himself confidently, Patrolman Pete had not warned him for nothing.

"That Jose," Pat's friend had confided, "may be crafty, but some day he'll make a wrong move; then I'll get him."

Anxiously the boy waited for Vincillia's next words. "I tell you I keetch," he bragged, wagging his great head from side to side. "All I got to do iss find Gonzeles, then mooch pesos iss mine."

"Ours," a thick voice corrected. "None of your cut-throat stuff this time. Where you got 'em?"

The captain's face blanched with anger. "Where you 'spose?" he asked. "What ees oilskin for?"

Pat's breath came in short gasps, for what could this mean but evil doing? It would be impossible to reach broad-shouldered Pete as he patrolled the lower section of San Francisco's Latin quarter, but Pat could at least follow Jose and his dark-visaged companion, so stealthily the boy hastened after them, down one fog-laden street and up another, until, as is often the way of a city of hills, they found themselves high above the sea.

Outside a dingy abode Jose paused and started to whine, "You teek my fren'," he urged, "an' I stay an' watch."

Angry words followed, but the captain won his point, handing the mate a tissue-wrapped package.

"You mek queek!" he warned and skulked down an alley.

Pat's breath came in fiery gulps as he saw the sailor place Vincillia's prize carelessly in his back pocket. With Jose out of sight the boy crept noiselessly up behim and with infinate care removed Capt. Vincillia's treasure. Once Pat's fingers closed on it, panic seized him and he ran blindly down many wooden steps, ever turning to the north in a vain endeavor to locate Pete, but found, instead, a strange policeman grasping him by the collar.

"What 'er yer doin'?" he asked gruffly, reaching for the tissue-wrapped package.

"Please, oh please sir," the boy begged. "That wus for Pete. There's robbers a'land sir, that came into port on the Mary C."

"A likely tale," the policeman laughed, but sobered suddenly as a string of jewels slipped from the paper.

"Diamonds!" he gasped, shaking the now thoroughly frightened Pat. "That'll do for you, son!"

"I tole' you robbers wus here," the boy sobbed. "Why don't you make the quay sir? I lifted 'em outer' th' mate's pocket ter give ter Pete, but he—but you—" His voice broke querulously as he felt himself pulled swiftly toward the wharf.

"There t'is sir. It's the Mary C lyin' lopsided by th' new cutter Renown," Pat spluttered. "An' there is her lights shinin' bold as can be."

Even as he spoke a thread of gold spat into the fog, followed by the thud of an engine.

"Halt!" shouted Pat's new guardian, but received as answer a shower of lead bullets.

"So, that's yer game?" he bellowed, pushing Pat from him and leaped into the water.

The boy saw something bright gripped in Jose's hand as the policeman scrambled aboard.

"I've got you, Vincillia," he shouted covering him with his gun. "Put up your knife an' hand over them trifles or you'll be in Davey Jones's locker." With a low snarl the captain surrendered his booty, other strings of blazing white diamonds.

"Australian smuggler," the policeman laughed, slipping handcuffs over Jose's wrists. Then, "Whoever you are, my boy," he added, addressing the spot on which Pat had stood, "I wish to thank you."

"Pat, sir, Patrick O'Riley," called a small, hollow voice.

"Pat, I'm sorry I misjudged you," his new friend apologized. "You see, well I'd like to do something to make up."

"Oysters, sir, I'm special fond of them," he suggested.

"Hev' your fill," the policeman's deep voice boomed, and Pat, his knees striking one against the other from sheer pride, strutted into the "Glass House."

Aunt Dolly's Question Box

Dearest Aunt Dolly:

I am writing you today in hopes of having you solve my problem. It may be a slight problem, but to me it is a very serious one.

My mother and father died when I was a toddler, and my grandmother has been the one to raise the two of us, myself and my sister. She seems to think the world stopped progressing when she was a girl. She does not want us to be young, or dance or have any fun, but Aunt Dolly, dear, I know this is all wrong. Other youngsters have good times, so why shouldn't we?

What am I to do? I just don't know what is best, but I do know I can't stand this much longer. Please help us by answering my question—should a young girl live like an old lady?

Looking forward to your ever helpful reply, I am,

Lovingly yours,

BERTHA.

Bertha dear:

Yours is a problem not so easily answered, as one could write columns on the tragedy of youth outstripping age. Often dull eyes cannot glimpse the possibilities life offers, and the sacrifice demanded of us sometimes are far from just.

I know how hard it must be living in an atmosphere where people fail to really understand you, and where they attempt to rob you of a normal amount of liberty. But try to remember, Bertha dear, that this little old lady who raised you and your sister has honestly tried to do her best. Her ideals have not changed as they should. Criticize this, we must admit, but we must also remember she is your grandmother, the one who has loved and cared for you, so try to meet her half way. Point out how the world has changed, plead for a little more freedom and I am sure she will listen to you.

If not, do not hesitate to write me again.

Lovingly yours,

AUNT DOLLY.

Clothes, Gifts, Needed to Help Forward Club's Sunshine Drive—You Can do Your Bit to Help

WANTED:—Old clothes, shoes, hats, shirts and dresses to fit children between the ages of 2 and 18. Why? Because already our books are filled with names of those seeking help during the winter months.

We also need toys of all descriptions, discarded books, canned goods; in fact, anything you may wish to donate will be useful.

Many members are doing their bit by collecting junk of all sorts, newspapers, bottles and sacks.

These are sold and the money turned into our treasury to help carry on our Sunshine Drive.

Christmas is coming, that pitiable time of the year when lonely hearts ache with an extra bitterness and the eyes fill with tears. Are we going to sit calmly back and let those less fortunate than ourselves suffer? If not, do your bit today. Tomorrow never comes. Our office force already is busy stacking up gifts, mending clothing, making soft and woolly animals to delight children in the hospitals. Will you not do as much?

If it seems irksome, ask yourself these questions: Would I welcome a neatly-wrapped package if I was just plain Mary Jane, a little nobody, an orphan, alone and unwanted?

Draw a comparison between your warmly-lit drawing-room and the bareness of an institutional dormitory, then let your conscience be your guide!

A SIDEWALK ENCOUNTER

An old gentleman was walking along a street one winter morning. The sidewalk was sheeted with ice and the doctor was making his way carefully, as was also a woman going in the opposite direction. In seeking to avoid each other, both slipped and they came down in a heap. The polite old gentleman was overwhelmed, and his embarrassment paralyzed his speech, but the woman was equal to the occasion:

"If you will be kind enough to rise and pick out your legs, I will take what remains," she said cheerfully.—[Everybody's Magazine.

HERE'S "JUNIOR" CLUB YELL

Members, here's a real, regular club yell for you, so learn it by heart and when we give our next big rumpus shout it at the top of your lungs.

Rha! Rah! Rah!
Sis! Boom! Bah!
Who are we?
The T.J.C.
A peppy bunch.
Full of punch.
That's the T.J.C.

SANTA CLAUS IS COMING—SH!

"JUNIOR" CLUB ARRANGING ENTERTAINMENT FOR ORPHANS, NEEDY

Everyone has been asking, "What will we do this Christmas:" They are curious to know the plans and good times in store for our precious little members in the Orthopedic and Children's hospitals and the orphanages of Los Angeles.

If you are truly interested, we'll give you a tiny hint. We are planning, first of all, a big parade of beautifully decorated machines. Then will come a complete performance featuring plaintive Hawaiian music, crack-a-jack banjo numbers, and a miniature pageant written and staged by Aunt Dolly.

There'll be a Santa Claus, of course, who will sing rollicking songs and draw from his crimson sack thousands of precious gifts. But, best of all perhaps, will be his retinue of round-faced brownies and tiny fairies, with glistening wings, tinkling bells and pointed toes, my, what a frolic of joy and laughter it will be!

This is merely a sketchy idea of the really big program now being carefully completed, but one thing is sure: we will give to our crippled kiddies and motherless tots a rousing good greeting.

THIS MEANS YOU!

If you want to join the T.J.C.
Just write a letter to Aunt Dolly, care The L. A. Times,
Or a postal card will do!
Just ask to join the happy club—
She'll send you back a pin.
And when we give our merry shows the badge
Will get you in!

If you can sing or play or act
Please let Aunt Dolly know;
Some day when there's a party you
Can help to give the show—
There's lots of fun—it all is free—
There's not a cent to pay—
And every member's welcome—so
Be sure to write today!

We love you all, as you must know—
So join our happy throng—
It's meant to be a club of youth
And joy and mirth and song.
It's just to bring us happiness,
It's just to keep us young in heart
While walking life's long way.
The club can't have too many grins;
Each child is asked to write;
Joining Aunt Dolly's happy club
Before another night!

BE A FRIEND
BY RALPH EINSTEIN
Age 15 Years
139 South Kingsley Drive
Los Angeles, Cal.

Be a friend. You don't need money
Just a disposition sunny;
Just the wish to help another
Get along some way or other;
Just a kindly hand extended
Out to one who's unbefriended;
Just the will to give or lend,
This will make you some one's friend.

Be a friend. You don't need glory
Friendship is a simple story;
Pass by trifling errors blindly,
Gaze on honest effort kindly,
Cheer the youth who's bravely trying,
Pity him who's sadly sighing,
Just a little labor spend
On the duties of a friend.

Our Roll of Honor: An Art Assortment by Club Artists

ANIMATED BOTANY---A COMEDY OF THE WOODS

BY ESTELLE HARRIET ROBBINS

Key to the Illustration

No. 1—Wild Carrot. Queen Ann's lace (Daucus carota.) European. Time, summer; color, white; place, this species, which is very abundant throughout the country, is detested by the farmer as it is very prolific and each plant strikes its roots deep into the ground. It is the most beautiful member of the Parsley family and is often called Bird's-Nest.

(Are you saving this series on "Animated Botany?" Remember, Daffy Dill is offering a prize for the best set of ten of the illustrations in colors.)

"I shall be glad," said the Wild Carrot, "when we can afford to move away from these tracks. The whistles are getting on my nerves and the smoke is ruining our laces, and I don't think our business will last very long if you continue doing the foolish thing you did yesterday, swallowing that handsome Bluebottle Fly just as he was about to purchase some web."

"Don't worry," replied the Spider while weaving a new design on a Rosebush. "What is a fly or two compared to the pangs of hunger? especially when you take into consideration the fact that he might not have paid us? Perhaps I did a wise thing after all. Look how I trusted the Spiderwort with lace for her wedding veil and think of the yards and yards we gave to the Calico Bush. You may extend credit if you care to, but I have decided to devour my customers before they cheat me. I think we might as well close up our shop, anyway, as we are not making expenses. Lace is quite out of season; fur is now the style. Only yesterday I saw Jack Frost climb Jacob's Ladder to his loft. That means the North Wind will soon be chasing the leaves down the lane, and if you observe closely, Pipistrelle, the Bat, leans lazily against the tall Mullen, where but a few months ago the Tulip related her experience. The Saffron and Hawkweed share a Toadstool once occupied by the Prince's Pine."

A tittering of voices is heard from the balcony of branches, where a party of Swallows are perched. Then all is silent as the Herald Moth has announced Autumn.

The Aunt Dolly Doll

QUEEN OF TOYLAND

Is not for sale. She must be won. This is the sweet little old-fashioned dollie that has become so popular from coast to coast.

Aunt Dolly has authorized us to give away entirely free one of her beautiful dolls, for four new subscriptions to the Los Angeles Times, each for one month or longer. This step has been taken to prevent childish heartaches as rich and poor must now win the famous Aunt Dolly Doll.

The Aunt Dolly Doll is also given free for two new subscriptions, provided payment for three months is sent direct to The Times in Los Angeles at the same time you send in your new subscription.

THE LATEST IN SEATS

There is nothing more tiresome than to have to stand up for hours watching a parade or race, or waiting for a street car, as the case may be—all for the want of a seat. But this will no longer be so, thanks to the "handbag seat" recently invented. When closed the new invention is said to be an attractive likeness of a lady's handbag. On the outside it has a pocket for the handkerchief, purse and all the other "necessities" usually carried in women's handbags. It even contains a small mirror. If the owner of the new bag gets tired of walking or has to wait for something or wants to see a parade, all she has to do is stretch the steel frame of her handbag, which is equipped with a cushion arrangement, and be seated on her novel "handbag seat."

Because you live in Southern "Cal."
Where all throughout the year—
No biting winds to nip your nose,
Or frost to freeze your ear,
You may not think you'll ever need
The outfit pictured here.

But just you wait till Christmas time
When Santa Claus comes 'round,
And you'd like to visit Grandma
Where snow is on the ground.

Then this soft, warm, fluffy coat,
And cozy little hat,
And snuggy little leggings will come
To you—just like that.

HARLEQUINADE!

The laughing, lilting romance of Pierrot and Pierret has never been filmed. This charming study, however, of Colleen Moore and Lloyd Hughes, as the lady of coquetry and her fanciful lover, awakens the hope that they will bring these characters to the screen. It is believed by those who have seen them in costume that they suggest the fanciful and whimsical lovers perfectly. —Studies by William Mortensen

THE illustrious Marquise de la Falaise de la Coudray is not feeling so good.

That Gloria Swanson was in danger of a dangerous slump was apparent when she came here to make "The Coast of Folly." There is only one direction for a sky rocket to go after bursting into colored stars.

A Bogus Bernhardt

If Gloria had plotted against herself for a year, she couldn't have made a worse "pick" of a play than "The Coast of Folly."

Gloria is really an exceptional actress; but her attempt to act like Bernhardt was ridiculous and tragically absurd.

The age of this woman had been carefully registered in the story as about 45. Gloria played her a tremulous old relic somewhere between 90 and 100.

Reaching too High

I have never known it to fail. When an actress finally gets the chance to play "her life's ambition," it is always and invariably rotten.

The reason for this is that when they get "the great chance," they always try to direct the picture themselves. And it is a matter of extreme difficulty—as many have discovered—to pitch a baseball; then run around behind the bat and catch it.

Stella Dallas

Every one is curious to know how much commotion "Stella Dallas" will cause at the box office.

In the hands of Henry King and Frances Marion, it has been made a superb work of art. It will make Belle Bennett one of the great actresses of the screen; will put this charming child, Lois Moran, on the map. But whether it will make any money remains to be seen. It certainly is a gloomy tale.

I liked it except the last episode. Oh, my gosh—Henry and Frances—that mother standing out in the rain and cold looking through the window at her daughter's wedding!

Alice Joyce

At that, the scenes of Stella Dallas that I can't forget seem to hover around the quiet, poised, well-bred acting of Alice Joyce. She is one of those thoroughly delightful actresses who do not make unnecessary motions with their hands.

Pola be Good

I don't know what disaster it presages; but the lovely Pola has suddenly ceased being temperamental. In "The Tattooed Countess," in which she is working under the direction of Malcolm St. Clair, Pola is sweet, amiable and docile. It must be the mark that was tattooed on her arm. When she likes, Pola can be adorable. I say when she likes. . . . .

Doomed to Comedy

One of these days two girls are going to surprise the movie world. They are Dorothy Gish and Louise Fazenda. Both are a lot bigger than anything they have ever done.

Although I must say this: Dorothy has to her credit the best single scene in which I have ever seen from any woman on the screen; that was in "Hearts of the World" when she accepted the boob lover she did not love.

Dolores Coste

Methinks that Captain Kidd is kidding! this feminine reproduction of the famous p unduly too charming to harbor thoughts whi the firearms. Alice Ardell, who appears in Comedies, is the girl behind the guns.

Highlighting Happenings

Now, it's Edwin Carewe who comes forward with a "find" —Dolores del Rio, whom he discovered recently while on a trip to Mexico. If the beautiful Miss del Rio displays as much charm and grace on the screen as in this portrait, she should go far on the way to fame. Carewe has cast her for an important role in "Joanna."

Ho, the bandit! In "The Eagle," Rudolph Valentino assumes the part of a Caucasian outlaw, a role which enables him to indulge plentifully in comedy and thrilling incidents. —Photo by Nealson Smith

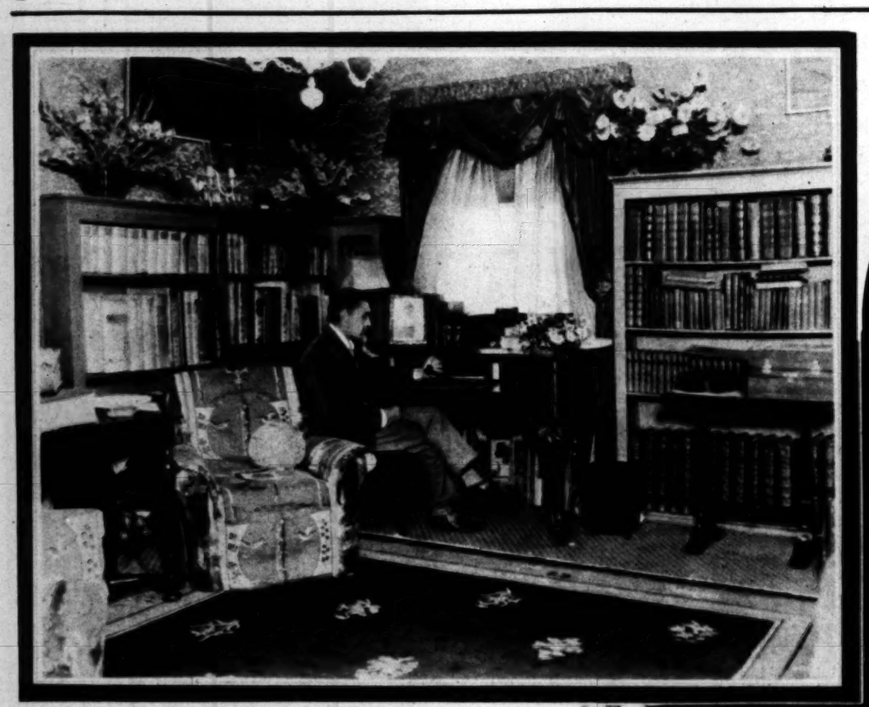
Doug's continually staging surprises. From a Thief of Bagdad, he became the Son of Zorro, and now he's a Black Pirate. An adept, always, in the art of dynamic entertainment, he should be seen at his best in "The Black Pirate."

When figures tell their own film story. Fay Lamphier, recently chosen as Miss America of 1925, at Atlantic City, is to be featured in a Paramount picture called "The American Venus."

How a dance hall favorite looked during the Gold Rush. Gladys Brockwell interprets the entertainer of the days of '49 in "The Splendid Road," which Frank Loyd is making.

Discovered—another veteran of the Civil War. Raymond Griffith, having posed in pictures as everything from a king to a chauffeur, is now impersonating a Confederate spy in "Hands Up."

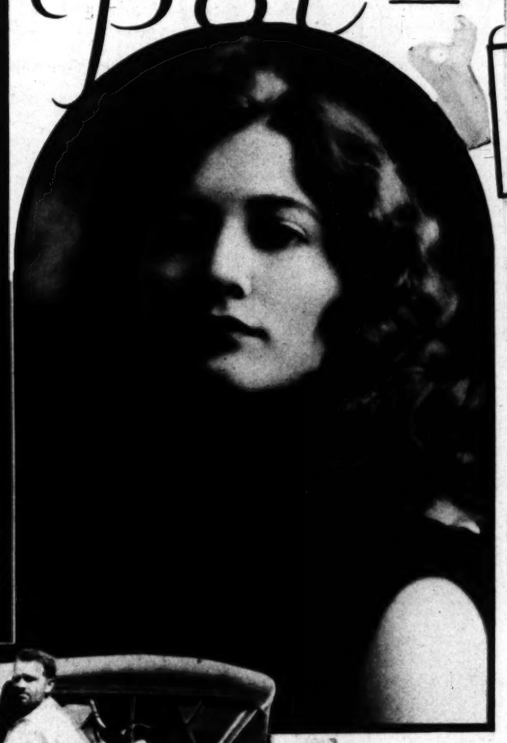
...ks that Captain Kidd is kidding! Certainly ...time reproduction of the famous pirate looks ...ite charming to harbor thoughts which go with ...ures. Alice Ardell, who appears in Joe Rock ...dies, is the girl behind the guns.



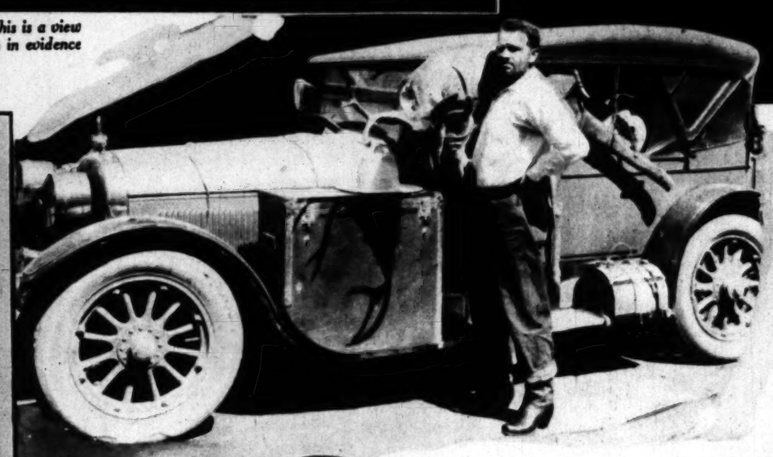
What more could Barrymore's fans desire? This is a view of the famous John with the well-known profile in evidence as he sits in a corner of his study.

Pot-Shots!

Out of the nowhere into a featured part with Bill Hart! Betty Baker's name is of no great moment at present but perhaps tomorrow will tell a different tale. She will play one of three important feminine roles in "The Lighter of Flames," the western star's next production. —Photo by Murillo

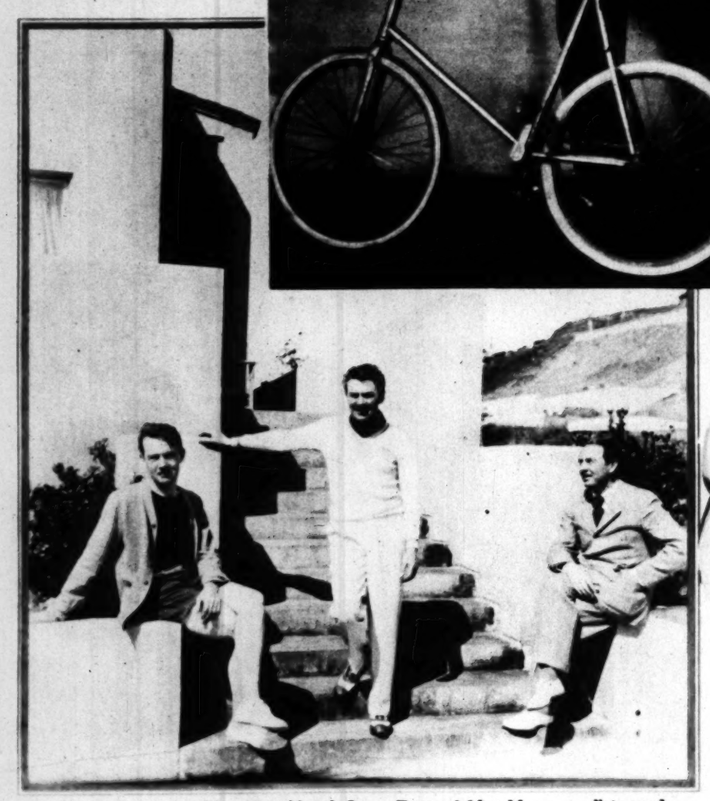


A picture with its own title! However, as a side remark, let it be known that the pocket-edition sized actress is now engaged in playing in "Magpie" with Bebe Daniels. This view is a back yard glimpse after a morning romp—in rompers.



One of life's proudest moments! Note the expanded chest in this glimpse of Wallace Beery returning home after the hunt. Did he shoot the buck? Read the answer in his face.

It isn't the cycle of bicycles—but Al St. John doesn't care. The comedian has one on which he performs in every comedy and always can he be depended upon to present some new and startling feat. —Photo by Seely



More and more—of Moores. Although Owen, Tom and Matt Moore are all featured on the screen the surname in each case stands for a different type of characterization. The brothers are seen here on the steps of Matt's beach home.

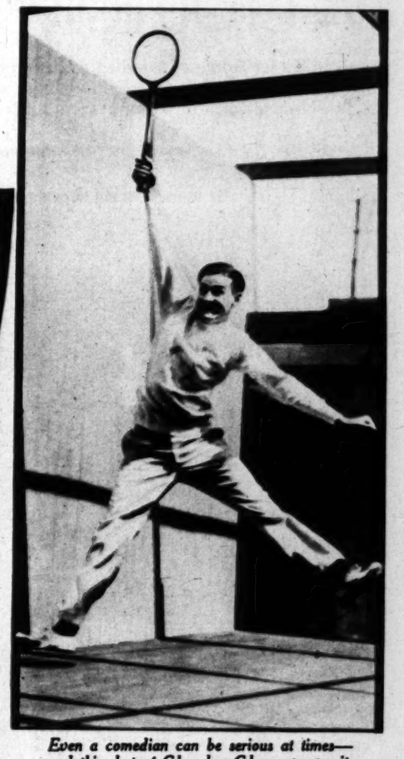
Hola for polo! Douglas Gilmore is one of many film actors who spends his spare time on a pony racing down the field after the whirring white ball.

SPEEDING the SPEEDERS

Discovered—a bather who swims! This extraordinary person is none other than Norma Shearer, who, by token of this glimpse, shatters all illusions that bathing suits are to be worn—away from the water. Miss Shearer is one of the best swimmers in the film colony.



Even a comedian can be serious at times—and this shot of Charles Chase proves it. The Hal Roach star is caught by the camera in a desperate effort to hit a squash ball. Judging by the facial contortions, Chase is easily the winner.

The god of exercise has another devotee. Monty Banks—he of the funny antics—pauses in his making of comedies long enough to demonstrate that one's manly figure must be saved at all costs.

The hero of petticoats is an athlete as well. Syd Chaplin, whose career seems permanently turned in the impersonation of the feminine, is an expert rider and may be often seen on the bridle paths. This view was taken in front of his home.

Up in the air over a tennis game! No one could possibly suspect Ramon Novarro of a burst of athletic temperament, but nevertheless he is certainly up in the air.

The CLOD-HOPPER again!

"Sweet Adeline" the medium by which Charles Ray once more evinces his ability to play the bashful country boy. Is seen at his best.

One of the most humorous episodes of the picture is that in which Charles Ray, as the rube choir boy, tries to "crash the gates" of a sophisticated New York cabaret. Gertrude Short is the chorus girl applying the powder.

On the old family melodeon Ray practices "Sweet Adeline" in a reedy tenor for the village choir.

Charles Ray and Jack Clifford in a brotherly encounter back on the farm. The brothers are rivals for the hand of Gertrude Olmstead.

In "Sweet Adeline" we see Charles Ray as his old self and Gertrude Olmstead as his country sweetheart.

PERIODICALLY, it seems, producers turn from art to hokum to twang that chord of idealism in the hearts of the great public, which results in waiting lines in front of the box-office windows.

So it is that in "Sweet Adeline," Charles Ray's latest filmic adventure, we find hokum as the chief motif. The plot is hokum, the settings are hokum, the costumes are hokum and the cast does its best. But a representative audience at a Hollywood theater, where this production was previewed, was turned into a bunch of howling, laughing, shouting, applauding maniacs—all of which did not augur that the picture was a failure, by any means.

"Sweet Adeline" is an idyll, in which Ray struts his stuff, mainly in a pair of pants borrowed apparently from one Charles Chaplin. It is thoroughly unmodern, save in the closing scenes; it is utterly unlifelike, unrealistic; and it is charming, delightful, amusing and very funny at times.

Father has the gout, a mortgage and a farm. Mother has steel-rimmed spectacles and an abiding belief in her elder son, who, strangely, is the village baggage-master and the villain of the piece.

Ray, as the younger son, who has an amazing ability to feed hogs, chop wood, do the thousand countless other chores of the old-time farm, wear cowhide boots and make friends with baby goats, aspires to sing in a reedy tenor—whence cometh the title.

Both the brothers fall in love with a new girl who has just come to town, being Gertrude Olmstead in a school girl braid. To impress her, Ray, who has been saving his money, races the fast express to town, with numerous attendant narrow escapes, that he might mail order a suit of clothes to be delivered in time for a forthcoming picnic.

The fatal day arrives and so does the suit, but the elder brother dons it and walks out, leaving the younger to attend the picnic in a pair of father's pants, built on the general style of an inverted hoop-skirt. At the picnic, where a race for the old-fashioned races for box-lunches decide the partners for the day, Ray wins the girl, but in the tussle the impromptu fastenings for the trousers are unloosed and the fun begins.

Meanwhile, the mortgage becomes due and the old folks are ordered to move out in regulation fashion. The elder brother proposes to the girl and is rejected in favor of Ray, who, in a fist fight, wins by a knock-out. Then the elder brother gains revenge by sending the younger to Chicago with a fake letter to a cafe, where presumably, a job as a singer awaits him.

In his rendition of "Sweet Adeline" he gets the hook, pulls a few heroics, prances for the second time upon the stage and sings—this time, really sings. Success, of course, finds the mortgage paid off, the old folks well fixed and Ray and the girl driving off in a Rolls-Royce, just married.

In "Sweet Adeline" Ray manifests a far more delicate and sure touch in his characterization of the young farmer boy than in "Some Punkins." It seems that an art which he has brought to perfection is slowly but surely returning to him, with a promise of even greater success than he has here achieved.

Miss Olmstead is more than convincing in an unconvincing role. She is attractive, though, as means a great deal.

Jack Clifford, as the brother, goes over very while the rest of the cast their respective roles, evi good picking on the part casting director and in the contribute to the credit of Storm, the director.—[M. C.

"Well, my dear, who would have thought it! And why doesn't somebody think of it sooner!" said Stella with consistent inconsistency. "Of course, I shouldn't like, to awaken in the morning and find myself gazing at Chinese dragons carved on the ceiling, and at the same time, dearie, to look out up here two Hollywood homes will bloom where only one bloomed before."

It does sound hectic, but when you come to sift it down it's all very innocent, really. Quite excusable for being a social event, because we were invited by us at the new Four Hundred Club of movieland, which is housed in the Oriental palace belonging to the Bernheimers.

Besides three of the brothers, their wives and their devotion to art, is one of the beautiful homes of Hollywood.

One of the brothers died, and the other two just couldn't bear to look at all those beautiful collections of Chinese and Japanese objects d'art which they had had such pleasure in collecting abroad, each with its memories of the happy comradeship of the three.

Now all these treasures are to belong to the club.

"Maybe," said Stella, "there will be a ghost!"

Frank Elliot, it seems, stage-managed the whole transaction of the purchase, and he surely deserves credit. Just as Stella said, those screen stars certainly have needed stage-managing in their social affairs, and Frank Elliot seems to be the boy for their money.

As for the difficulties he has undergone, and the patience he exhibited—well, as Stella rightly avers, he deserves to be placed right in the class with the little Dutch boy who held his hand in the busted dam all night.

BEBE DANIELS showed a sense of the eternal fitness of things when she wore a gorgeous Mandarin coat to the reception, and Jack Gilbert for one seemed to realize how prettily she fitted those surroundings. Indeed, Bebe looked as though she might break out into a "Mikado" melody at any minute.

Quite a bachelor lot assembled in a sort of little tea-room—Buster Collier, Roscoe Arbuckle, whose wife wasn't with him just this once, and Rudy Valentino.

"By the way," confided Stella, "I hear that Rudy got a telegram the other day from his wife, asking him when he was coming to Paris! Some of their friends are sure they will make up."

Claire Windsor and Bert Lytell, the inseparables, were there, with Claire appearing as stunning as ever, and Madge Bellamy looked too sweet for anything in a Quaker-ish sort of dress and hat.

WE heard music coming from the little open music room at the end of the patio, and somebody was dancing the Charleston.

"Of course, it is Priscilla Dean and Ruth Roland," commented Stella, and sure enough it was. "I saw them only last night Charlestoning at the Sixty Club at the Biltmore. Now the question is, where did these indestructible Charlestoners Charleston in between times?"

There was a gorgeous radio room—but for some strange reason you couldn't get Lew Cody anywhere near it!

ALL filmdom's finest had driven up the hill to the club house opening Sunday afternoon.

"But who says that figures don't lie?" demanded Stella. "There really are, it seems, degrees of being Four Hundred-ish.

Claire Windsor and Bert Lytell are Hollywood's most famous inseparables, according to Stella. —Photo by Hartsook

"Anyway, I saw Frank Elliot looking fiercely at his lists as he bent over a bright-haired stenographer in a room where the Chinese dragons were all looking in offended surprise at a modern and noisy typewriter, and you could just see that he had his blue-pencil all sharpened up. It must be awfully hard to divide the sheep from the goats when some of the goats do look so very sheepish."

THE club house is gorgeous, the ceilings and walls being panelled with Chinese and Japanese carvings and draperies.

"But it is really hard, today," whispered Stella, "to see the club house for the club!"

And just that moment, as we were taking a peep at an inlaid table, we fairly bumped our heads against Jack Mulhall and his pretty wife, who were having a peep, too.

Some of the stars suited their surroundings and some did not.

Rudy Valentino, for instance, looked to be in a perfect setting in a red-and-gold bedchamber with a group of golden, jasper-eyed geishas trooping over the ceiling, and with Rudy critically examining a collection of precious jades—of course, I mean the stones!

But when we found the husky Noah Beery and Ralph Lewis feeding rice paste to the goldfish in the lily pond, well, as Stella rightly said:

"That dainty little patio doesn't much resemble the great hokum spaces, does it?"

"The most wonderful piano playing—and how much more, the Duo-Art has brought to us! Through Percy Grainger—folk lore and dances, a new angle on Kipling, an insight into Nordic music and Ibsen. Through Hofmann, Paderewski, de Pachmann—what tone portrayals of history and patriotic fervor! Could I never go out again, I should feel I had a goodly portion of the great world right here in the Duo-Art"

"Music does not live until audible. By causing it to live, by exhibiting it in its most beautiful aspects to countless thousands, the Duo-Art is not only a perfect performer, but a precious assistant, a helpful friend, whose noble purpose and beneficial influence must be recognized and appreciated."

I. J. Paderewski

If music comes —

IF Music comes—entering every room in the house and every heart that bides there. If Music comes—that reaches nursery and playroom—the tone picture that lights the childish imagination; the harmony that swells the fresh young voices to song; the rhythm that frees young bodies to wholesome, graceful dance—

If Music comes—that cultivates a true appreciation of the most glorious of all the arts, furnishing joyous, restful hours at the end of the day's turmoil—brightening the path of those grown older with happy memories—

If Music comes—not only a musical instrument for you to play, but exquisitely played music, to which you may listen and dream; the first-hand message of the great Paderewski—of the wonderful Hofmann, and the other living masters—

And this music only the DUO-ART can bring!

How greatly enriched in culture, happiness and resource shall be your home.

The DUO-ART is the supreme reproducing instrument. The manner of artists' recording is far advanced and exclusive with the DUO-ART.

A preponderant majority of the concert pianists of Europe and America now record their interpretations only for the DUO-ART.

The DUO-ART is the only instrument upon which their authorized present-day recordings may be heard.

Giant Daffodils

We have just imported from Europe a splendid shipment of enormous bulbs—the best we have ever imported and offer the following excellent varieties:

KING ALFRED: A large, bold flower and a very strong grower. Golden yellow perianth and trumpet, the latter of beautiful form with deeply frilled mouth.—Per Doz. $2.50.

EMPEROR: Large flowers with well expanded trumpet and fine stems. Pure yellow perianth and trumpet.—Per Doz. $1.00, per 100, $7.50.

EMPRESS: Identical in every respect with the variety Emperor except the color, the perianth being white, while the trumpet is rich yellow.—Per Doz. $1.00, per 100, $7.50.

POETAZ ASPASIA: Bunch flowered daffodil. Perianth pure white, cup rich yellow. The individual blossoms are true Poeticus type in form. Stems very long. Excellent for cutting purposes. Per Doz. 75c, per 100, $5.50.

POETAZ ELVIRA: Similar to the preceding in form. Stems are surmounted by three to four flowers. The petals are broad, pure white—the cup is golden yellow distinctly edged with orange. Very fragrant.—Per Doz. 75c, per 100, $5.50.

VICTORIA: Very large erectly borne flowers. Perianth delicate, creamy white. Trumpet clear rich yellow.—Per Doz. $1.00, per 100, $7.50.

POETICUS: Poet's Daffodil. The perianth is silvery white, the cup short, edged with scarlet. This is considered by many the most beautiful and dainty of all the daffodil family.—Per Doz. $1.00, per 100, $7.50.

[Cultural Note]—Daffodils thrive in light, rich soil and when possible they should be planted in a bed by themselves. After the blooming season, water should be withheld and the bulbs allowed to ripen in the usual manner. The water required to keep other plants alive during the summer months is specially harmful to them. Plant the bulbs three times their own depth and six to eight inches apart. After a growth of a few inches is attained, a light mulch of some well rotted manure will be beneficial to their growth.

The American Cataclysm

By JAMES J. MONTAGUE

Picture by MERLE JOHNSON

The hero seized the cable from a derrick beside him and swarmed up it with one hand while he held the lady in the other.

THERE was a time, a couple of years ago, when the movies were practically in their infancy, that a director was considered a bit extravagant when he wrecked railroad trains or ran ocean-going steamships on the rocks just to give people a thrill.

But the times have advanced since then, and the movies have advanced a little ahead of them. As yet I haven't seen a New York skyscraper toppled over so that the hero might stand on the pavement below and catch the heroine who happened to be sipping an ice on the roof garden when the building started to disintegrate.

But if such a thing hasn't been done already, which it probably has, it will be done next week or the week after. The mere cost of catastrophes of this kind isn't considered any more. With the nickels and dimes and quarters and half-dollars pouring in from five or six theaters on every main street in this broad land, the question of expense need not be considered.

Only the other day I went to see a movie show in which the hero, who was suspected of murdering his mother for the family jewels (a foully unjust suspicion, of course) took to the woods rather than explain to a jury which was prejudiced against him because all twelve of the good men and true were in love with the girl whom he had recently become engaged to.

Well, the director knew that getting out bloodhounds, even a very expensive pedigreed pack, to hunt the fugitive with would be old stuff, and that the audience would run out on him as soon as the first dog trotted on the scene.

But he had to get the hero out of his hiding place in order to have him captured and led to a tree with a nose around his neck later on. That always supplies a thrill, because there is a lingering hope in the breasts of some of the spectators that one of the actors will get excited and pull a little too hard on the rope, and produce something a little out of the ordinary.

This director had apparently racked his brains for all the possible ways of bringing the hero out of the woods, but found none of them sufficiently expensive or spectacular. So what did he do but have the woods catch fire from the spark of a passing locomotive (the spark being shown fanning itself into flame on the top of a pine tree.)

The tongues of fire leaped from bough to bough, swept over a river, burned down a couple of farm houses which seemed to be in excellent condition, and finally came to the cabin where the hero was in hiding. Naturally he left the place, and was seen running like mad amid the showers of embers, his handkerchief over his face to keep him from inhaling the carbon dioxide gas and dying from it before the big scene could take place.

In the meantime the heroine, who had been told that the fire had been set in order to smoke out the brave boy, climbed into her flivver and went tearing into the red-hot forest to rescue him.

She found him resting under a tall redwood, which was worth 50 cents a board foot and must have contained at least $1000 worth of lumber. Gently resuscitating him with aromatic spirits of amonia she got him into the car and started to drive home. But the director, who was loose as the very ashes he was creating when it came to money, had also set fire to the country highway bridge which was sagging in the middle when she got there. She crossed barely in time to look back and see it precipitated into the canyon below while a pillar of flame arose above its ruins.

Of course, the lynching scene was interrupted and the hero saved, but that isn't the point. The important thing is how the picture company could afford to burn up what must have been three or four acres of good fir and cedar and pine and redwood timber, not to mention three or four houses and a bridge.

In another picture a young man and a young lady were plighting their troth under an irrigating dam, when the director sent a flood down from some dam he must have built higher up the stream. When the flood hit the dam, which appeared to be a hundred feet high, and must have cost ten million dollars, it broke right in two in the middle, and if the hero hadn't seized the cable from a derrick beside him and swarmed up it with one hand while he held the lady in the other, the play could never have been finished for the lack of the leading people.

It was possible however in this instance for the producing company to make the freshet serve a double purpose, for in another picture I went to see a few days later there was a little town sleeping peacefully in a valley when suddenly cries sounded from a long way off, and the slumberers wakened and thrust their heads out of the window to learn that a dam had broken and a torrent was upon them.

Now this, I sincerely believe, was the same dam. It hardly seems that just for swank the director would break up two dams, when one would serve in two pictures.

However in this second picture a whole town, with banks, motion-picture theaters, five and ten-cent stores, churches, livery stables, garages and a police court were all destroyed. Figuring them even at the cost of building twenty years ago when building materials and labor were cheap they must have been worth a couple of million. And so messed up were they by the water which carried them off that the salvage could have amounted to little or nothing.

I never knew what this picture was about, for I came in late, and all I saw was the flood, and a close-up of a young man and a young woman in very damp clothing embracing each other as they floated out into smooth water.

I suppose if it were possible cyclones and tornadoes would also be employed in the movies, but with the limited means of controlling the forces of nature, there is probably no way in which money could be used to bring these things about.

squeezing the adjacent area until the blood no longer exudes. For most of these simple type of hemorrhages nothing else but sterilization is necessary.

In some few cases where the hemorrhage will not stop, it is necessary to use an external coagulating agent. Ordinary starch alum powder is usually sufficient or one can purchase from any drug store a styptic stick or styptic powder which will retard the flow of blood. In bleeding from the rectum, the application of ice packs is helpful.

Hemorrhoids or piles are caused by congestion of the veins in the rectum. Sometimes they appear as external lumps, sometimes they are internal and cannot be seen. Sufferers from piles—all those who have had them—know the pain and misery they cause. Fortunately, there is a new, scientific, safe and sure relief for piles. It is known as Pazo Ointment. Pazo relieves pain almost instantly. It soothes the irritated parts, relaxes the muscles, reduces the swelling and inflammation. Pazo Ointment is easy to use. Just apply a little Pazo Ointment on the tip of the finger and gently insert it. Pazo Ointment lubricates, relieves itching, soothes and heals. Pazo Ointment is supplied in tubes with a perforated pile pipe which makes application easy and thorough. Ask your druggist for Pazo Ointment.

Golf and Others Troubles

By BARRIE-PAYNE

AN AMERICAN thinks that the greatest eagle in the world is the one on the dollar—unless he takes up golf.

All a man really needs to know about golf can be told in one hundred words and learned in one hundred years.

The mathematician who decided that "a straight line is the shortest distance between two points" had never tried to play straight over the trees on a dogleg.

According to my notion, the supreme pinnacle and apex of optimism is displayed by the golfer who thinks he's Houdini and tries to come out of a sandtrap with a brassie.

The last time I entered a barber shop I found the barbers discussing golf. And I can prove it! Sic transit gloria baseball!

There are probably ten thousand golfers in the world. Each one will average five thousand strokes in a season. A total of fifty million strokes. And perhaps as many as one thousand of these strokes are entirely satisfactorily to their makers, leaving no cause whatever for complaint.

I've managed to cut five strokes off my average score during the past year.

Not so wonderful, you say?

Well, it's better than Bobby Jones has done.

Consoling thought for dubs who envy Walter Hagen: The earth is just a small speck spinning in endless space, one of a trillion planets, and one of the smaller planets at that. So even the mighty Walter has only a local reputation, when viewed from this angle.

"Do you find that golf hurts your business? Do you neglect your work for the sake of golf?"

"No sir. Since I took up golf my business is 'picking up'."

Most clubs have a rule against buying balls from caddies. But a certain youngster has a scheme for evading the law. He approaches a player and says, "Here's those six balls you lost yesterday. Tip me a dollar and you can have 'em back." The player grins, hands the kid a dollar and receives six balls that he never saw before in his life. Both are within the law.

Scientists are still dabbling with schemes for riding to Mars on a rocket. I've got a better plan than that. Tee yourself up and let Bob MacDonald, Abe Mitchell or Cyril Tolley wallop you with a driver.

AFTER the rotten game I played yesterday I refuse to write about golf today. I'm disgusted with the whole bloomin' business. No, don't beg me. I won't do it and that's positively final. Here goes a column of pepigrams on general subjects. If you don't like it please remember that the law requiring you to read these articles was repealed by the last Legislature. I'm feeling mean and grouchy today. My present impulse is to crawl under the table and growl fiercely at all passersby.

Statistics: If all the radio announcers in the world were laid end to end across the bottom of the Pacific Ocean that would be fine.

The figures show that Congressmen, landlords and vaudeville actors live longer than burglars, but that doesn't make it right.

Any woman will tell you that performing an ego-ectomy on the average man would be a major operation.

I wonder where all the loafing was done before hotel lobbies were invented.

Jevver notice how people suddenly discover what a criminal face a man's got after he's indicted?

If a girl marries a man who can't support her we say she's crazy. If she marries a man who can support her we say she married him for his money. So, as Socrates used to say, what's the use?

The Orient is gradually giving up polygamy. The Occident may some day follow suit.

I had a horrible dream the other night and dreamed that the Constitution of the United States was unconstitutional.

It's still a pretty good world despite all the efforts to improve it.

A man sees only the faults in the things he's got and only the virtues in the things he's trying to get.

They also serve, and expect just as big a tip, who only stand and wait.

The average man is a thrifty worker. He can make a little work go a long ways and last a long, long time.

Meat packers utilize all parts of the hog "except the squeal," and maybe they can sell that now for static to broadcast over the radio.

Fame is too transitory to justify conceit. The goat-getter of today is the gate-getter of tomorrow.

Another cheerful thought. A young man has capacity to enjoy money and no money. An old man has money and no capacity to enjoy it.

Why should a boy waste four years in college when he can sit two hours in a barber shop and get the complete inside dope on everything?

Sixteen men on another man's chest. Yo, ho, ho, and and a rush-hour street car.

(I hasten to explain that the mild bitterness evident in the above paragraphs is not a real index to my character. It's just a temporary condition resulting from that rotten round of golf.)

"Golf is bound to be a high-priced game anyway you take it."

"It isn't golf that's high. Golf isn't high in England where they use some sense about expenses. It's the eternal demand for 'sporty' courses that runs up the bills."

"But this course is a positive disgrace. Diegel made a monkey out of it the last time he played here. Shot a sixty-four and wasn't going very well at that."

"What if he did? Is this course built for the Diegels and Perazens that play here twice a year or for the three hundred members that play here all the time? God knows it's plenty hard enough for most of the members."

"Don't be an ass. You know blamed well this course isn't hard enough."

"Then why not let a few fairways grow up in weeds? Have more rough and less fairway. But of course that won't do because it doesn't give you a chance to spend money. Bunkers cost a lot of money so you gotta have bunkers. Any cheap way of making the course harder of course won't do."

"A lot you know about golf architecture."

"Hang the architecture! I play golf for the fun and exercise. What's the purpose of golf, anyway? All this claptrap about 'architecture' and 'standard courses' gives me a pain in the neck. I could knock a ball around over a cow pasture and have just as much fun for a fraction of the expense."

"Then why don't you?"

"Maybe I will. Nine-tenths of the golfers in this country seem to have lost their minds. Their idea is this: If a single member of the club winds up a single month of the year with a dime left in his pocket a horrible mistake has been made somewhere!"

be divided into two main groups; heredity and those causes acquired during infancy. Children who come from scrofulous or syphilitic parents, or who were conceived while their parents were under the influence of liquor or drugs, are more likely to convulsions than children born of normal healthy parents.

There are other causes besides heredity. In fact heredity plays but a minor part in the production of convulsions. The mistakes and stupidity, the vicious treatment and poor care of baby—these are much more fertile causes than those produced by heredity.

Sometimes convulsions come when an acute infectious disease overwhelms baby, such as measles, chicken pox, diphtheria, typhoid fever and others. More frequently, however, the cause can usually be traced to an irritation of the stomach or bowels. So often is this true that it is quite common practice for the doctor to consider convulsions as distinctly of digestive origin unless other factors are definitely indicated. Of course, under such conditions, the remedy suggests itself at once. Both stomach and bowels should be thoroughly cleansed—one by means of the stomach pump or wash (this should only be done by a physician or skilled nurse) and the other by means of the enema or repeated enemas.

If the convulsion is of digestive origin, all food with the possible exception of diluted fruit juices should be withheld. The stomach should be given an opportunity to cleanse itself and correct the defects.

Intestinal parasites are without a doubt responsible for an immense number of cases of convulsions. The irritating effects of huge masses of worms will produce a state of nervous tension and irritation of an extreme type. The only remedy is to get rid of the parasites and their eggs. Then discontinue the foods which will either harbor parasites or favor their development. As a rule most of these parasites are introduced by the consumption of meats or of meat products. Even though a child does not have convulsions or worms, meat is not necessary for his development or growth.

Where the conditions of phimosis has been permitted to go uncorrected to such a point that convulsions are produced, then there is no other alternative but circumcision, whether it be a male or female baby. It is then too late to start the slow process of retracting the foreskin.

These are some of the causes. There are many others. A clot of blood in the brain, tumors of the brain, falls, blows, the pernicious use of instruments in childbirth—these and many others may be responsible for convulsions.

However, the treatment is of considerable importance. Where the cause can be ascertained, correction in that direction should be sought. When the attack occurs the child should be undressed and put to bed. He should be free from fond friends at that time and none but mother or nurse should stand duty at his bedside. Quiet is absolutely essential. Icewater or cold water packs should be placed at his head while hot water bottles should be kept at his feet. Exclusive of the head, the rest of the body should be kept warm and comfortable. Warm packs to the abdomen have been found of considerable value in furnishing the relaxation so necessary during the convulsive attacks. The bowels should be washed repeatedly until the water comes clean. Drugs should never be used as there is no drug known which can overcome the cause.

After a child has had a convulsion he should be kept quietly in bed for at least twenty-four hours and preferably longer. His diet should be extremely light. If he be a nursing baby his feedings both in frequency and duration should be considerably lessened. If he be an older child accustomed to solid food he should be kept on nothing but water or diluted fruit juice for twenty-four to forty-eight hours at least. Always see that the digesive system is fairly clean and many of the responsible causes for baby's convulsions will be overcome.

ARE YOU SUFFERING from painful affliction of the feet, broken down arches, callouses, bunions, etc.?

Ready-made Arch Supports are an unsatisfactory makeshift because everyone's foot is different and the displaced bones, enlarged joints and deranged ligaments complicate matters still further.

We make supports from carefully prepared plaster of Paris casts and alter them to accommodate changes brought about by the wearing of the supports. In order to give relief and lasting satisfaction it is imperative that the foot be restored to as normal a shape as possible. We have an extensive experience in the correction of flat-foot, broken down arches and other deformities of the feet, and are able to promise our clients comfort and relief in every case.

It is not necessary to wear clumsy shoes with our supports; on the contrary, we often restore daintiness of appearance to feet badly deformed and unsightly.

Seen from the Green Verdugo Hills

The neighbors in the green Verdugo Hills were sitting on the stone fence watching the flame of the sunset on the Ventura Mountains. The purpled dusk had wrapped the kingly Sierras in royal robes. And soon the lights of the foolish automobiles would be flitting like fireflies up and down the Calabasas Road.

It Is Poor Business for Americans

Our neighbor, the man who reads the papers, happened to remark then—apparently without rhyme or reason, as the saying is—that he had been reading in the papers about American airmen caught in an ambush in Morocco where they were fighting with the French and the Spaniards to conquer the Moors.

Well, I am not sorry for them, said the man who has the phonograph. It is dirty work, and Americans should have no hand in it.

But, why is it dirty work? demanded the man who reads the papers. What have you got against the French and the Spaniards? he said.

I haven't got a thing against them, answered the man who has the phonograph. But, my sympathy is all with the Moors. They are in their own country and fighting for it. And no people ever put up a greater fight. Spain has no right to be in Morocco; neither has France. Besides, they are both bankrupt. They owe money which instead of paying they are spending on armies and navies and airships to oppress a people that has as much right to freedom as we have.

Yes, chimed in the man who plays the flute—yes, he said, it is the plain truth. And it makes me ashamed to think that Americans could be found to fight against liberty.

Well, here's good luck to the Moors, said our neighbor, the man who used to be a statistician. They were once a great people, and they seem to be a great people still.

It was a wondrous night, and we were sitting in the doorway of our little high house in the hills watching the incomparable pageantry of the stars in the limitless dome of the high heavens above our head.

A Night of Glory and the Stars

There was a great luminous star just back of the Cross of San Ysidro. It is the lamp of the good Ysidro, we said—a lamp for him that he may the better see to watch over all the little homes in the valley below. For that is his job—to watch over little homes.

There was another great star swung over the Ventura Mountains, and another, red and glowing like a huge ruby, over the dim peaks of Mt. Elsie. And the North Star was gleaming in the straight upper line of vision from our door.

And we were thinking how faithful is the North Star, and how faithful it has been through all the ages. How is was a guide for the Phoenician when he flung his first ragged sail to the winds. And how he steered by it from the blue waters of the Mediterranean out into the unexplored Atlantic to the narrow seas of the British Isles. The star that Columbus sailed with, and that mariners sail with still.

Came then to us also the memory of an old friend who there awhile back, went upon a journey from this world to the other. He was a lover of the stars. Their names he knew and the pathways they followed. When they would go and when they would come, their visitations and their wanderings—all this he knew.

And we were thinking—and believing, too—that now he is, himself, wandering somewhere among these great stars, making them ports of call as he sets sail from one to another on the wings of his soul.

Is it wrong to think that this may be true? Is it not reasonable to hope that God would let our old friend, who so loved God's stars, wing a flight to them that he might touch their glory and satisfy that yearning which was his when his feet were fettered to the earth?

We trust that this is the joy that has come to him. It was the wish that was in our heart when we watched the pageant of the stars from the doorway of our little high house in the hills.

Imperial Valley

An azure sea o'er mountain bars,
Paved with a million broken stars,
Besprinkled through with amethyst
And veiled with sapphire moonlight mist,
Now morning breaks on flower and fawn,
With trees—great torches in the dawn.
Rich fields, with red and gold aflame,
Their beauty show, their wealth proclaim.
Now shine in light of dawn's first glow
Imperial, Brawley, El Centro.
The air is balm, with tropic breeze,
The sky like fresh crushed strawberries
Bedecked with hue of grape and vine—
Oh, Lord of nature, all are Thine!
The golden valleys here below,
The silver hills in Mexico,
Alluvial plains of long-past tides,
With jeweled walls of mountain sides,
The torrid sand, the desert glow,
The mountains—distant peaks of snow,
And amber beds of ocean sand,
Down by the mighty Rio Grande,
This land of flowers and maidens fair,
This Vale of Angels, rich and rare,
With flocks and herds of lowing kine,
'Mid fronded rows of palm and pine,
The land where Nature gives her best—
This wondrous Nile-land of the West.

LAURENCE BRANNICK.

In our mail sack comes a letter from a poet who rails against fate. Because the divine fire consumes him, he can do nothing but make songs. And songs do not buy bread and raiment. He lives in poverty.

He Gave and the Others Took Away

A-ya, is this not the fate of poets since time began? Was not Homer a beggar, and did not Schiller toil in a garret with a crust to munch?

But, mostly, the letter gave us a night with the ghost of Robert Burns whose natal day will soon come again upon the calendar of time, and which will be celebrated with song and wassail the wide world over wherever Scots foregather. Aye, though it shall be to Scots only who shall foregather in an Australian bush when comes the natal day of "rantin', rovin' Robbie," they will thunder his songs to the open sky and weep their tears of exile into the cups.

Among the six greatest poets of all time the name of Robert Burns stands in the van, and always will. And yet, oh Lord, how great were his sorrows and how pinched he was with poverty. With his dying breath he wrote to a kinsman to send him money to save him from the shame of death behind a prison's bars.

Once, when his fame flamed high, he was much made of in Edinburgh by the rich and great. But, he went at night from their salons to lodge in a miserable room which he shared with a writer's apprentice for which the two paid, jointly, a rental of three shillings a week.

Alas, poor Robbie, then and always alas poor Robbie throughout the squalid span of his little thirty-seven years of life. He gave the grand folk of Edinburgh the jewels of his genius. And they gave him nothing in return.

Who were the grand folk? The world has forgotten. It is not at all worth while to remember who they were. But time does not forget Robbie. It hugs his name and his songs to its hungry heart. He is Scotland. Not Wallace nor Bruce, nor Walter Scott nor anyone else is Scotland. Scotland is Robert Burns.

So, there you are, poor poet who rails at fate. Are you willing to take my lady poverty for your mistress? Are you brave to go flaunting through the world with her in her rags of shame?

If so, and it shall be that you can make true songs, then you shall have your name written upon the golden scroll of deathless fame.

The members of the Millionaires' Club of Happiness and Contentment in the green Verdugo Hills are men who, although they cannot boast large bank accounts, would not starve if every factory whistle in America were to stop blowing tomorrow and stay that way till the cows come home, as the saying is.

Silk Stocking Man of the Future

Which is to say that each member of the Millionaires' Club in the green Verdugo Hills has his own nine bean rows and a hive for the honeybee.

You can't starve a man who has a patch of land. Even though it be a small patch. If it be enough to grow a mess of rutabagas, a stand of corn, some berry bushes, a few fruit trees of different varieties, and the like of that; with room for a good milch goat and rabbit hutches, a coop for the chickens, etc., why, then, will some one show us how in the dickens you can starve a man backed up in that way?

So, it is no surprise to learn that at a recent meeting of the club held on the stone fence from which you can see the sunsets on the Ventura Mountains and the lights of the foolish automobiles flitting like fireflies up and down the Calabasas Road, it was voted as the sense of the meeting that the silk stocking man of the future will be the farmer.

The more people there are who flock to cities, the better it is for the farmer. They can't grow stuff to eat on the stone sidewalks of cities. And, a man must eat or die. And the fellow who has the eats to sell is the fellow who is bound to be sitting pretty in the very near future.

The girl who picks a farmer for a husband is, we would say, a girl who has inside her head the requisite gray matter that makes brains.

It is too bad that Lewis Mumford did not know about the glamorous Franciscan enterprise in California when he was writing his book on Utopias.

One Utopia Nearest to Success

When the Franciscan Missions in California were in full swing Utopia came nearer to realization than it ever came before or since. As a matter of fact and of history Utopia actually existed here for a generation or more.

The Missions flung upon the golden coast of glory from San Diego to Sonoma constituted the happiest communal empire that ever existed in this world. There was the joy of the day's work, the voice of prayer; song and laughter filled the sunny mornings. There was peace. There was plenty for all and it all belonged to all.

Plato's Utopia was on paper, the others hardly survived their first breath of dreams. But, the Franciscan Utopia in California came into full flower and endured throughout lives of its founders.

You who sit in the synagogue are well acquainted with the name of Jackson A. Graves. He is a big banker running a big bank in the roaring town. But, he is more than that. He is a writing man of the first order.

A Big Statement From A Big Banker

And we have often expressed the wish in the synagogue that he would quit banking and write books that posterity would value and cherish.

That's neither here or there, however. Brother J. A. is a stubborn fellow and it is hard to sidetrack him.

What we want to get at now is that in the latest of his monthly pronunciamentos which he issues in pamphlet form and through The Times to his depositors and the public he has made the tremendous statement that there has been but one bank failure in the roaring town of Los Angeles in all its history. And that this one failure occurred years and years ago when the City of Our Lady was nothing more than a sleepy little pueblo.

No wonder that Los Angeles has taken her place among the great cities of the world. Banking is the backbone of business. And good banks make a good town.

History will take good care to write down the big hand that J. A. Graves had in making this almost unparalleled record.

HEARING RESTORED OFTEN IN 24 HOURS

Amazing Results Secured in One Day by Use of Virex Formerly Known as Rattle Snake Oil.

Deafness and Head Noises need not be dreaded any longer since the discovery of a widely known physician. Now it is possible for some of the most obstinate cases of deafness to be relieved in a day's time by the application of a prescription formerly known as Rattle Snake Oil. This treatment is meeting with wide success all over the country.

Mr. D. M. Lopez, a Pennsylvania man, says: "I used the treatment at night before retiring. The following morning I could hear the tickings of the alarm clock that I was unable to hear before. Now my hearing is restored perfectly after many years of deafness."

Mr. Ben Jackson, who lives in Indiana says, "Before I used Virex I could hear nothing. After ten days I could hear my watch tick."

Angeline Johnson, a Mississippi resident, had been stone deaf for eighteen years. She says, "Virex has stopped my head noises and I can hear the train whistle 3½ miles away."

Roy Fisher, Iowa man, says, "I hadn't heard a watch tick for eleven years—now I can lay my watch on the table and hear it plainly."

Mr. W. A. Lumpkin, of Oklahoma, says, "After being deaf 38 years, I used your treatment only a few days and hear fairly well."

Mr. Anthony Chapman, of Michigan, says, "The terrible head noises have stopped entirely and my hearing is practically back to normal."

Deaf Baby Now Hears.

Mrs. Ola Valentine, of Arkansas, says, "My little boy, now 5 years old, had been deaf since about 4 months of age. Now he hears very well and is learning to talk."

Mr. Mather Pelleys says, "My young son, deaf for years, has used Virex for only three days and he hears almost as well as ever before."

Such amazing reports come from all over this country and Canada. The prescription which is known as Virex, is easily used at home and seems to work like magic in its rapidity on people of all ages.

So confident are we that Virex will restore your hearing quickly, and to introduce this remarkable treatment to a million more sufferers, we will send a large $2.00 treatment for only $1.00, by collect on delivery mail, on ten days' free trial. If the results are not satisfactory the treatment costs nothing.

Send no money—just your name and address to the Dale Laboratories, 135 Gateway Station, Kansas City, Mo., and the treatment will be mailed at once. Use it according to the simple directions. If at the end of 10 days your hearing is not relieved, your head noises gone entirely, just send it back and your money will be refunded without question. This offer is fully guaranteed, so write today and give this wonderful compound a trial.

squeezing the adjacent area until the blood no longer exudes. For most of these simple types of hemorrhages nothing else but sterilization is necessary.

In some few cases where the hemorrhage will not stop, it is necessary to use an external coagulating agent. Ordinary sterile alum powder is usually sufficient or one can purchase from any drug store a styptic stick or styptic powder which will serve to coagulate the external surface.

Perhaps some of these measures may help in time of emergency.

The One-Meal System

THERE are many people who have found health and happiness in changing their diet habits from gluttony to moderation. The three squares per day as is in vogue among most people today is far too much for the average sedentary nervous worker.

The article below, appearing in Dr. Tilden's Philosophy of Health, furnishes an excellent exposition of the merits for the "one-or-two-meal-a-day" system.

"The time for taking food, and the proper distribution of it in appropriate meals, are questions of considerable importance, notwithstanding the fact that they have been influenced by the fashions of the day and the artificial habits of society. How much the distribution of meals has had to do with the modifications of the human species is, indeed, a problem of much interest. That it has had much to do in changing the habits and complexions of people, and even in rendering extinct various races of men, there can be no doubt.

"Man in his savage state feeds with great irregularity; for, when he finds that food is plentiful, he eats from morning till night, and knows no other pleasure than that of eating and sleeping; but when food is scarce, he is content with a single meal a day, and many times must be satisfied with considerably less than that. But, whether his food is plentiful or scarce, the quantity consumed is usually in excess of his needs.

"Among civilized nations, and until comparatively recent times, there were but two meals a day—namely, dinner and supper. These were the meals of the Romans. The dinner was for the most part a light refreshment, eaten while standing, at about nine o'clock in the morning. It generally consisted of the cold remains of the previous day's supper. The great meal of the day among the Romans was the supper, which was taken about three or four o'clock in the afternoon, and to which friends were invited. This was the ceremonious meal, for which the wealthy and high families exhausted the resources of art and luxury.

"Gradually, as the dinner got to be later in the day and reached noon time, there was felt to be necessity for a light early meal—or "breakfast," as it was called, and, as the dinner became later and later still, a fourth meal was added, the lunch or luncheon. In process of time, with the introduction of tea and coffee into England, there came a fifth meal. But all along the dinner was the great feast of the day, and the rule in using it was to eat until there was a sense of satiety sufficient for the most riotous epicure or for the most careless gourmand.

"It is not surprising that this habit of taking five meals a day has persisted down to within very recent times, in view of the fact that the common mistake of humanity consists in the belief that the pleasures of living are increased by dissipation, or the excessive indulgence of privileges or luxuries, which nature intends only for occasional diversions, if at all. Ignorance of this law of happiness is the cause of most of the sin and suffering of the world, besides inducing old age and death; hence the great necessity of teaching it more directly from the rostrum and the press and in the public schools, for the permanent betterment and elevation of the human race and for the prolongation of human life.

As an indication of how views and customs change with the advance of new ideas, it is only necessary to recall the fact that during the last twenty-five years a complete change has taken place, not only in the time of partaking of the heartiest meal of the day, but also regarding the number of meals required for the best nourishment of the human body. Scientific discoveries, such as those of Atwater in the Yale University laboratories, and the writings of Fletcher, Dewey, Densmore, and others, and also the practice of fasting have all had much to do in changing public opinion regarding the time and the number of meals necessary for maintaining good health. It is true that in many places, particularly in our own country, many large hotels are still prepared to serve five meals a day—a hearty breakfast from eight to eleven o'clock, a luncheon from one to three, a dinner from six to eight, tea from eight to nine, and supper from ten to twelve; making twelve hours a day for the disposal of several elaborate meals. Five meals a day may appear absurd and impracticable to most people of today, notwithstanding the fact that many still make the sad mistake of indulging in three full meals—all that their capacity will permit—to gratify a craving and an abnormal appetite."

Neuritis and Neuralgia

SINCE we are living in the day when everything must carry a label and every disease must be specifically titled, perhaps a little light can be thrown on those two exceedingly popular diseases, neuritis and neuralgia. What are the differences between them? Even though this knowledge may not be useful from a curative standpoint, those who suffer want to label their ailments correctly.

The most important differentiation in neuritis from neuralgia is that the pain is quite continuous in neuritis while in neuralga it is spasmodic, paroxysmal and periodic.

In neuritis the pain extends throughout the entire length of the nerve and if you press along its pathway the sensations of distress will be elicited. In neuralgia the pain is focalized at one point instead of extensive.

In neuritis the nervous reactions are undergoing degeneration. Sometimes this will show itself in unstabilized muscular movement, sometimes in muscular twitch, while most of the time it will manifest itself in a continually lessened nerve force governing the muscular structures. In neuralgia there is no degeneration of the nerves and the muscles governed by the various nerves are not involved.

Finally, many cases of neuritis have no external manifestations while oftentimes neuralgia is accompanied with a form of skin eruption which is known as herpes.

Neuralgia is in reality a periodic irritation due to certain impurities gathering at one point and affecting a small area of a nerve. Sometimes these impurities seek to escape and consequently we have the eruption.

Perhaps some of these points may permit readers to assist in self-diagnosis.

Care of the Baby—Convulsions

OF ALL baby's ailments which strike a vivid picture to our imagination, convulsions undoubtedly take the lead. To see the tiny body suffering excruciating agony, with muscles tense, face drawn and pale as a sheet, to hear the moaning and crying, is a sight never to be forgotten. Even though the clinical picture of convulsions is one that is awful to witness, yet as a whole, the ailment is not as serious as appearances indicate.

Although it is baby's muscles that become effected by the spasm, yet basically, convulsions act on the nervous system, brain and the spinal cord more than on any other area of the body. Consequently convulsions are classed in the nervous group of diseases.

The nervous system of the child is so delicate, so super-sensitive, so finely adjusted that it takes very little cause to upset it. All small children are keenly sensitive to the nervous reactions of their parents; a nervous mother or even a nurse caring for her child will generally see some nervous manifestation associated with her own tense condition. This is more markedly true in the case of nursing infants. Baby feels the nervous tension and excitement that mother undergoes.

In general the causes for convulsions may

The STRENGTH of a LITTLE THIN THREAD

By Achmed Abdullah

IBRAHIM FADLALLAH shrugged his shoulders.

"You do not understand, my friend. You cannot get it through your head that it is impossible to destroy caste and to create fraternity by act of Parliament. Allah—you can't even do it in your own country."

"But modern progress—the telegraph—the democracy of the railway carriage—" interrupted the American.

"You can compel a Brahmin to sit in the same office and to ride in the same railway compartment with a man of low caste, but you can never force him to eat with him or to give him his daughter in marriage. You spoke of those who are educated abroad—and even they, my friend, when they return to Hindu drift back into caste and the ways of caste. For there is a little thread—oh, such a tiny, thin little thread—which binds them to their own land, their own kin, their own caste. And it seems that they have not the strength to break it—this little thread.

"Ah, yes! Let me tell you something which occurred last year—a true tale—and please do not forget the thread, the little thread.

"Now the whole thing was like a play in one of your theaters—it was staged, dear one, and well staged. The scene was the great hall in which meets the caste tribunal of a certain Brahmin clan. Imagine, if you please, a huge quadrangle, impressively bare but for a low dais at one end, covered with a few Bengal shawls and an antelope skin or two—ah!—and then the dramatic atmosphere. Not the atmosphere of death—oh, no—much worse than death, much worse.

"For what is death compared to the loss of caste? And that afternoon they were going to try a man who had sinned a great sin, a great sin more heinous than the killing of cows—not a sin according to your code of laws—but then they were men of a different race, and their sins are not your sins—eh?—and mayhap their virtues may not be your virtues.

"On the dais sat His Holiness, Srimat Munswamappa Rama-Swami, and on either side of him stood anxious disciples who looked with awe at his thin, clean-shaven lips and fanned his holyold poll with silver-handled yak tails. Near him sat the pleader and a few Brahmin grandees, whom he was in the habit of consulting in cases of importance. At a respectful distance were the men of the clan, they filed in slowly, prostrating themselves in turn before the Swami and uttering the name of the presiding deity with trembling lips, while His Holiness smiled a contemplative smile, and while his fingers counted the beads on his rosary.

"The proceeding opened with a sermon pronounced by the Swami. First he praised Canesa, Sarasvati and half a dozen other assorted deities, and then with a great abundance of detail and many long-winded quotations he set forth the duties of the twice-born. He told them that a Brahmin should not break up clods of earth nor tear up the grass under his feet; that he should not look at the setting sun, the rising sun, the sun in eclipse, the image of the sun in a pool of water; that he should not point at the stars with fingers of irreverence; that he should not sleep with his head turned toward the north or west; that he should abstain from cutting his nails with his teeth, from using the same toothpick more than once, from eating off plates used by others, and from wearing sandals worn by strangers—and a thousand such foolish injunctions.

"The assembly was politely bored, but the Swami enjoyed himself hugely. For it gave him an opportunity to show his great learning and his wonderful memory, and then, like most holy men, he loved to lay stress on the outward emblems of his faith. He illustrated his sermon by relating several horrid examples, chiefly that of a wicked barber who had shaved a Brahmin with a razor which had been polluted by the shadow of a low caste falling on it. Finally, he commented on the advent of modernity and expounded with more lengthy and tiresome quotations how the devils of progress, skepticism, irreverence and anarchy were making headway amongst the twice-born, how the young Brahmins were making their names a name of scorn in the present world and spoiling their chances for the future world.

"Then he whispered a word to the pleader, who called up the case of Chaganti Samashiva Rao, a young Brahmin accused of having sullied his caste by marrying an infidel.

"There was a commotion at the door, and then Rao appeared, struggling furiously in the arms of half a dozen muscular youngsters. The pleader explained that Rao had studied in Boston and that he had brought home with him a girl, a native of the land of the foreigners and a Christian, whom he had married according to the laws of the Americans. He had thus polluted himself, his father, his mother, his cow and his caste. Here the pleader was silent for a few moments to let the atrocity of the crime soak into all hearts, and then he asked the assembly for a verdict. And the assembly shouted like one man: 'Let him lose caste. Drive him out. Drive him out.'

"But Rao rose and declared he was going to make a speech. He said he would tell the old fossils, including His Holiness, Srimat Muniswamappa Rama-Swami, what he thought of them. There were roars of 'Throw him out!' 'Stop his unclean mouth!' and angry hands were raised. But His Holiness smiled a thin, mocking smile and bade the assembly be quiet and listen to what the defendant would have to say for himself.

"Rao acknowledged this permission with a sarcastic bow of gratitude, pulled out his cuffs—he wore English clothes—and proceeded to shock the grave assembly by declaring that he did not give a 'whoop in Hades'—such was the expression he used, he being a perfect English scholar—for all the Brahmins, all the Swamins, and all the caste tribunals in the length and breadth of Hindustan. He had been brought into court by force, he indignantly complained, and he absolutely denied the power and the right of assembly to punish him. For he had lived several years in America, had become an American citizen, and had voluntarily thrown away his castes as he would a pair of worn-out sandals.

"His Holiness interrupted him, saying that he would now pass sentence on him. But Rao exclaimed: 'Sentence—the devil, you've neither the right nor the might to sentence me.' The Swami, never heeding the interruption, continued with a calm and even voice: 'I sentence you to the living death of the outcast until such time as you expiate your crime, acknowledge your errors, and regain your caste status, which you forfeit today, through the regular methods as laid down in the holy books. Your friends and relatives will assemble on the first unlucky day of next week, and will offer, as if to your manes, a libation in a pot of water which a slave girl shall dash against the walls of your house, and all who take part in this ceremony shall be regarded as impure for three days. Your friends and relatives shall not be permitted to accept your hospitality, nor shall you be allowed to share theirs. Your touch shall be pollution unspeakable. Your children will be outcasts and shall not marry anybody but Mangs and Mahars. Your own father and mother shall be forbidden your house under the risk of losing caste. Neither your barber, your tailor, your cook, nor your washerwoman shall work for you. Nobody shall assist you in any way, nor even at the funeral of a member of your household. You shall be debarred access to the temples—'

"Here Rao, who had mocked and laughed during all this sentence, cried: 'Save your breath, oh, holy one, for indeed all this tommyrot can never affect me. As to hospitality, I don't care to invite those old fossils of Brahmins into my house, nor could I ever bring myself to set foot in theirs and listen to their tiresome dissertations about the Veda and the Upanishads; besides, I've plenty of European friends. As to my children being outcasts, know, revered uncle, that I have none, and that if ever I should have any they will be Americans like myself and marry like myself. As to my father and mother being forbidden my house—well, they're both dead. As to my being debarred access to your temples—by the great god Shiva, I never go there anyway.'

"His Holiness waited until Rao had finished, and then he said, with the same inscutable smile playing about the corners of his thin lips: 'I furthermore sentence you to have torn from your body the sacred thread of your caste, though'—here he smiled again—'I hardly believe that you, who have voluntarily given up your aste and who mock at everything connected with it, can by any chance still have the thread about your person.'

"Here Rao made a wild dash in the direction of the door, but he was stopped by many willing hands. There was a short and furious struggle, his clothes were torn—and, my friend, it appeared that he, the scoffer, the atheist, the expatriate who had renounced India,, who had thrown much filth at caste, who had become an American, a free-thinker, and a scoffer at superstitions—still wore next his heart the thin thread, the holy thread of his caste—the holliest, the most intimate, the most exclusive, the most secret, the most important emblem of the caste which he affected to despise—"

Ibrahim was silent, and the American asked: "Well, what happened?"

"Oh, the usual thing. Rao did penance; he feasted the priests, he went through the regular process of ceremonious purification—"

"But what about the girl?"

"His wife? Oh, he sent her back to her own country." Ibrahim gave a dry little laugh. "Yes, my friend, you assuredly understand India. You can reform the world with your progress, your modesty, your splendid democracy—you wonderful Anglo-Saxons. Only it appears that there is a little thread—Allah, what a tiny little thread!—which brings to naught all your wonderful civilization, your liberty, your democracy. Ah, such a tiny little thread, my friend."

There was a commotion at the door and then Rao appeared, struggling furiously.

Contagion and Infection

Contagion means a contact, or touching together, whereas infection stands for a tainting. It is on the difference between these words that the distinction between these two classes of ailments was drawn.

Almost all diseases are now known to be caused by the introduction into the system of certain germs. These germs in some cases can only be communicated from one body to another by actual contact, direct or indirpct. Thus, a healthy child, touching one suffering from, say, scarlet fever, might itself contract the disease. Or again, by playing with a toy belonging to the sick child, it might equally well pick up the germ. In either case there has been a touching or contact, and a contagious disease has been communicated.

There are, however, germs which can be conveyed not only by contact but also by a tainting of the air. The germ of consumption may, for instance, be carried into the atmosphere and there breathed in by some one who has never been near a sufferer. In this case there has been no contagion, but a disease has been carried by infection.

CARE OF THE BODY

learned how short the moment of best vision is.

"Not only is it impossible to hang on to our point or area of fixation for any length of time, but the attempt to do so is exceedingly fatiguing. 'The retina is very quickly fatigued by maintaining a fixed stare, even for a moment,' says Huey, and the point is one which we can demonstrate for ourselves. We do not need the word of experts, and, considering how they have misled us in this field, that is something to be thankful for.

"The relation of these facts to good vision is surely as plain as the proverbial pikestaff. If we see most at the first instant, if trying to look longer fatigues us, it is evident that we will see best and most comfortably when our eyes move rapidly from one area of fixation to another. It is also obvious that we ought not to wear over our eyes any contrivance which, like glasses, limits their freedom of movement.

"It is impossible to stop the visual movements, and unless the sight is markedly imperfect (in which case the stary eye is obvious to the most casual observer,) they are usually so frequent that one would not suspect that they were less so than they normally should be. The fact that the sight can be improved in such cases, however, and a feeling of rest induced by voluntary movements demonstrates the contrary.

"The cultivation of increased mobility of the organ of sight proves thus to be an essential factor in the increase of its powers. Some people catch the trick easily. Others may cause themselves much discomfort by conscious shifting, although they have never suffered from eye discomfort before.

"In a previous article it was stated that the eyes need work and rest, but it is difficult to distinguish between the two; for, as Cowper has said, 'absence of occupation is not rest.'

"Moving the eyes, since it depends upon muscular action, might come under the head of what the books call 'ocular labor,' but when one learns how to do it properly, nothing could be a greater rest.

"Persons who find conscious movement of the eyes difficult, can begin with their eyes closed, shifting from one side of the mental picture to another. Then the shifting can be done with eyes open and closed alternately. A long, slow movement is easiest at first, but afterward a shorter one, as short as from one side of a period to another, will be preferred, and one may become able to make it very rapid, although one cannot keep up a rapid shift very long. In the case of unconscious movements, however, there seems to be no limit to what the eye can not only endure, but thrive on. This is true of eyes with normal vision and sometimes with errors of refraction. The sixteen pictures, with their great mass of detail, which are thrown upon the cinema screen every second, must necessitate very rapid movements of the eyes; and yet some people's eyes are more rested by looking at moving pictures than by anything else they can do.

"Records of the natural movements of the eye show that they are extremely erratic, seemingly following no law, but it is well to

In so doing, and has the advantage of being very soothing to the nerves. For this reason a 'rhythmical' shift from one side of a mental picture to another will do much to produce relaxation when palming, and is an excellent way to induce sleep. Agassiz used to put himself to sleep by looking at his feet, mentally, and shifting from one to another, and one of my pupils did the same thing, in spite of the pain of arthritis, by shifting from one side to the other of the letter O. Pain in the eyes can usually be relieved, partially or completely, by this method, and sometimes it will relieve pain in other parts of the body. There is also an advantage in keeping up a rhythmical movement of the body without looking at anything definite, either visually or mentally. The shift from one definite point to another is best when it can be done easily, but anything which changes the area of fixation is restful.

"Some people make trouble for themselves by trying to keep the head still when moving the eyes. This is neither necessary nor desirable. Nature intended head and eyes to move together.

"The constant movement of the eye normally produces an illusion of movement in the objects one looks at, and it is a help to notice this movement, or to imagine it if one cannot see it. Almost anyone can observe this illusion in the case of extensive movements of the eye; but it ought to be apparent with the smallest movement, and it is even more pronounced in the case of mental pictures than in that of things actually seen."

Salt

THOSE of you who find that you "just cannot eat your salad" or any other food without salt, please read the article below written by my predecessor, Dr. Brook, in a magazine which he edited called Brain and Brawn.

"The consumption of the inorganic mineral, chloride of solum, or table salt, is a habit and a superstition—an acquired habit, as to taste, a superstition, as to its necessity.

"You have heard, perhaps, about that unfortunate prisoner, in Holland, who was fed bread without salt, until the worms devoured him. All nonsense. He could eat bread without salt, and be healthy, until he died of old age, if it was entire grain bread. If it was bread from bolted flour, and he got nothing else, he would certainly die before long, for lack of the organic salts, or mineral elements, contained just beneath the bran. Majendie has proved this, by feeding two dogs, one on white bread, the other on bran bread. The one fed on white bread died within a couple of months. The other remained perfectly healthy. It is a lack of these necessary organic salts in the food that leads to a craving for the harmful inorganic salt, chloride of sodium. It does not, however, replace them, any more than whisky replaces food.

"In a recent publication of Dr. Willamer Stephanson, the discoverer of the white Esquimaux, new arguments have been added against the use of salt in the dietary. Dr. Stephanson, as a result of his experience in the Artic, considers salt as a positive hindrance to life. He describes its action upon himself and his followers as a narcotic poison, and found its use absolutely eliminated from the dietary of the Esquimaux, who would rather submit to the ravages of starvation than to use food cured or seasoned with salt. On the basis of the data, Dr. Stephanson draws the conclusion that sodium chlorie is incongenial and harmful to the system, and its use in the dietary of the civilized races a grave physiological error. Like tobacco, he says, salt has conquered our taste and instinct, by the unnatural craving created by its indulgence as a stimulant, resulting in a habit difficult to break away from.

"Breeders of the finest cattle and horses in England do not give them salt.

"Salt hinders the digestion of albumen, by interfering with the secretion of gastric juice. A piece of fresh fish, which will digest well in one hour and a half, requires four hours after salting. Those who are liable to attacks of gout often find themselves entirely free from their trouble, when abstaining wholly from salt, but suffer a relapse immediately when chloride of sodium is taken into the system. Inflammation of the kidneys is greatly aggravated by the use of salt.

"Overconsumption of salt is largely responsible for eczema and other skin diseases. Its ill-effects are especially apparent upon the kidneys, as upon those organs devolves the ridding of the body of a poison which cannot be utilized. Dropsy, and certain forms of heart disease, are in many cases caused in whole or in part by the free use of salt. The chief reason why a milk diet is so helpful in kidney disease is that the salt, which has been deposited in the tissues, is washed out by the salt-free milk. The same is true of the fruit cure, during which period no salt enters the body. Many have written that they have become absolutely immune to colds since they abandoned the use of salt.

"Advocates of the use of salt sometimes point to the fact that animals resort to 'salt licks.' In such cases it will be found that the food on which they have been feeding is deficient in certain natural organic salts, perhaps owing to poverty of soil. Then, of course, they may, in time, acquire an unnatural taste. Cows often form the habit of licking plaster and we know that dogs and horses have been taught to drink beer and chew tobacco."

Hemorrhage

VERY often the mother or teacher is confronted with the problem of controlling a hemorrhage in a child or other person. Hemorrhage may occur in various forms as the result of a wound, a nose bleed; in some cases blood may come from any of the other body openings.

Various principles of first aid must be evoked to prevent serious consequences. Fortunately most hemorrhages are of a minor nature, stop of their own accord and heal spontaneously. The average nosebleed comes under this heading. In a case such as this, merely the appliation of pressure or the use of warm or cold water is sufficient to stop the hemorrhage. Sometimes it is advisable to permit a nasal hemorrhage to go on for a few minutes, especially if the weather be exceedingly hot.

In event of injury or wound the ligature perhaps is the simplest method of controlling hemorrhage. If the wound occurs on a limb, a tight bandage should be wrapped around the limb on the side nearest the heart. By means of a stick of wood a tourniquet may be made. Merely the stopping of the circulation to that area will usually be sufficient to prevent the hemorrhage.

In the treatment of a cut or wound many people make the mistake of washing away all the blood as fast as it is exuded. This should be done for but a few minutes in order to permit the wound to cleanse itself, but after that a small amount of blood should be permitted to coagulate at the surface. This materially assists the formation of the clot and makes the hemorrhage much more short-lived.

There are other types of wounds where one should favor, encourage and assist the bleeding process. Where one has been injured and dirt has penetrated into the flesh, bleeding should be encouraged by

The STRENGTH of a LITTLE THIN THREAD

Keeping him covered with one revolver, she stuck savagely at his spark plugs.

The Right Miss Wright

He Made the Trip to Bring Back to His New England Home the Girl He Wanted to Marry, But—

By William Dudley Pelley

BOB HOBART "killed" his engine and allowed his coupe to roll to a halt. His head throbbed. Arms and shoulders felt afire. He wetted dust-caked lips.

"So th's," he sighed wearily, "is the desert?"

He rode alone in the heavy machine, camping accoutrements barnacled on running-boards and bumpers. Relaxing his grip on the big scalloped wheel-rim, he pushed up the rakish handkerchief that bound his forehead and surveyed the expanse of sun-baked immensity stretching off into haze.

He had reached the edge of a cedar mesa. Below him western Arizona had become a universe with its ceiling melted off. The sun's rays poured into a world of torturous aridity, of sand and lava-ash, yucca and cacti, seemingly without a sieve of intervening ether to mitigate the searing refraction. As far as his eye could discern, the Santa Fe trail narrowed to a pair of drunken wheel-tracks, hub-deep in sand, curving down the near-by grade and off into gridiron distance. For twenty miles he could see it ahead—as though some capricious deity had scratched the burned, browned surface of things with a sharp knife-point and the earth bled yellow gravel.

It was desert with a vengeance. The tourist searched a vista built on two planes only: vertical and horizontal. Nowhere else in the world did the sky lift so high or the panorama open so wide. The serried summits of lava mountains far to south and north resembled the backs of titan elephants herded motionless in distance through the eons.

Not even one lone buzzard flapped up in that measureless vault; not a sign of human life lay disclosed on all that expanse spread below. Once, an hour bygone, coming over a mesa mountain with scrub cedars dotting it like olive polkadots on dun-colored fabric, Bob thought he discerned another car, not unlike his own, crawling miles on ahead like an ant. But he had lost sight of it long since. Now he had the earth to himself.

"And I must cover all that," he groaned, "before I can get more grub or water!" He looked at his wrist-watch. Thirteen minutes to five. Two hours more and then sunset. He would try for the public camping-ground at Kingman before calling it a day.

He thought of his own Green Mountains of Vermont as he screwed the cap back on his smaller canteen and rolled a fortifying cigaret. He recalled cool rills, mossy ravines, inviting openings into green pastures and along still waters where a supper trout might rise to a fly. That was God's country.

He fell to wondering how Mary would react to such blistering distances hour after hour, day after day. She had never been keen about touring; his message that he intended to drive his machine across America and persuade her to end her California visit as "something other than a friend" had met with lukewarm response.

"Wonder if I'm making the mistake of my life?" the man had asked himself a hundred times on that lonely trek. "I like this sort of thing. She thinks it's barbaric. If I'm worried about her endurance on a twenty-day journey in a car as comfortable as this coupe, what am I letting myself in for life? Oh, well," he laughed, they're all alike; only their names are different!"

Despite the hundred and eighty miles he had driven since morning, he knew he could not tarry longer. His starter whined; his motor sprang alive, and the car moved forward down the grade.

There just below him on those scorching reaches his great adventure lay in wait.

Cicadas kept up an incessant sizzing as though the desert floor were strewn with millions of invisible rattlesnakes, their sinister tails all snapping in chorus. The coupe, caught in those resilient sand-tracks, remained in them like flanges. Bob's only control of his machine he maintaind with one cramped instep against the accelerator.

After traveling through four or five miles of yucca, greasewood, and Needles of the Lord he came suddenly upon an impassable barricade. The trunk of a dead yucca-tree had been dragged out across the trail. Against this "log" a board had been leaned. On it were red-chalked letters. "Turn Here!" and an arrow pointing southward.

Bob Hobart swore. Such a circuitous route meant additional miles of driving before he could reach the day's destination. Nevertheless, glancing back to make certain no tourist car followed into which he must crash, the Vermonter reversed his gears and churned in retrograde to a place allowing him to mount out of the flanges. Then between patches of brittle, gruesome vegetation he began twisting his way, steering around yucca-trees, boulders, buttes, and dunes, down along the dried-out bottom of a prehistoric river.

Down, down, down—lower and lower—into country momentarily growing wilder and rockier—his car nosed its way. Buttes and ranker vegetation shut off the northern view completely and a mammoth basin floor opened ahead.

"I'm lost!" Bob cried. "This isn't any trail. I've been side-tracked—off down here in this crazy chaos."

Not a sign of a tire-track revealed that any other car had passed that way before him. He worked his way up the waterless river-bed until queer, square ledges showed ahead. He mounted a slight incline.

Then ahead in the corridor of open sand appeared the prostrate body of a man!

Bob halted—sat staring. Legs and feet thrust out from the cacti, gruesome boots upturned, torso and head out of sight in the nettles. No way of circling him was apparent. Bob must stop and remove him or crush him.

In one of his suitcases the tourist had an automatic. The first week in this desert country he had worn it beneath his shirt. Then he had carried it stuffed in the crack of his cushions, finally packing it away altogether. But the sight of those mute legs so startled him that no thought of the weapon entered his head. Some desert "rat" had toppled or fallen down the butte, landing dead or unconscious at its base.

Bob fumbled with the handle and got the door open. Out on the running-board he stepped and down on the sand. Leaving his throttled engine turning over softly, he approached that grisly figure. He got abreast of it and stared blankly.

No man lay there—only a pair of old trousers stuffed with straw. Booth had been added to supply grim realism. Queer practical joke, this! Did anybody think—

Then an acrid voice sliced the silence:

"Reach for a star, stranger! Any star'll do! But reach for it quick. And don't make the least fumble!"

In reflex action Big Bob raised his eyes. Twenty feet from him, atop the low butte, stood a woman. She had one arm through the bridle-rein of a nervous calico pinto. Yet Bob saw more than girl and horse. He looked up into the ugly black holes of revolver-muzzles resembling twin tunnels opening into disaster.

"Did you hear what I said? Get your hands toward heaven and get doin' it quick!"

"My—dear—young—lady——!"

"You needn't dear-young-lady me! You hoist those hands!"

No such command had ever before been addressed to Robert Hobart of Paris, Vt. His obedience was therefore slow and clumsy. A lady road agent!

"Now, then, turn 'round!"

Still feeling foolish, and not a little nettled, Bob did that also. Then a woman and horse slid down the butte. Cold steel punched in the small of his back. A business-like hand patted around his belt, the pockets on his hips, the bulge of his khaki shirt beneath the arms.

"Whar's your gun? You got one. Griggs said so."

"In the car I've got a gun. But what's the large idea? Movie camera hid around somewhere?"

"You'll wish it was that. Whar you got Griggs's boodle?"

"Griggs's what?"

"You needn't try to act innocent-like. Reckon I've met your kind befo'. Wharever you got it, you can shove it out quick."

"May I turn around now?" Bob's uplifted arms made agony in his tired shoulders.

"Yaas, you can turn 'round. But don't try no fumididdles."

Hobart faced about. A girl in her middle twenties—about Bob's age—in short brown riding-skirt opened on a sunburned throat! On the horn of her saddle she had hooked her big cow hat. Bare of head in consequence, her hair was a flood of molten gold. Comely she looked, yet her shapely body had the resiliency of rawhide steel. The man asked whimsically: "How did you get away off here—so far from the 'Follies?'"

"So far from what?"

"The 'Follies.' You never heard of the 'Follies?' It's a Broadway show—"

"Never you mind any Broadway shows! Keep your hands lifted, stranger. I could drill you dead right this minute and get the reward just the same. So you remember it and be careful!"

"Reward for what, for pity's sake?"

"For you—if you don't know it yet."

"There's a reward out for me? For doing what?"

"Keep up those hands! I'm not an infant."

"No, I wouldn't call you an infant. But you're not exactly a lady, either—making me hold my arms up so with my shoulders dermic syringe, and material to put into it. Then leaving the room for a moment, the husband followed him and told him that they were not in favor of the use of drugs. The doctor returned to ascertain the views of the mother, and when she preferred to give nature a fair chance, he said "Very well, but what I would use would relieve you from all pain and would do no harm; besides, it would hurry things along considerably."

After that, I began using steam-heated woolen cloths over the abdomen, changing them every ten or fifteen minutes, which the patient said gave her not only relief, but caused a natural relaxation and also kept her from chilling between pains as she had done on former occasions.

By nine o'clock the baby was born, and soon after ten the mother had been changed into a clean, warmed gown and bedding. The baby was oiled and warmly wrapped. The doctor had departed and the husband was sleeping for the night.

During the night and next day, the warm applications were continued to relieve afterpains, but not changed so frequently as during labor. The first day the mother was given no food, only boiled water, either hot or cold, as desired. The second day, breakfast consisted of the juice of an orange in a glass of hot water. Lunch was four fresh figs. Supper was half of a delicious cantaloupe and a dish of fresh raspberries—no trimmings.

After that, the first thing every morning was the orange juice and hot water, followed by some fresh fruit or a dish of dried prunes cooked without sugar. The noon meal consisted of a cooked succulent vegetable such as spinach, carrots, parsnips, etc., with a baked potato. The night meal was fruit, either fresh or dried, the dried fruits ground with nut meats.

There was never any fever at any time. The milk came in without any bad symptoms whatever. It was surely rich and abundant, and all without the mother drinking any milk, tea, or coffee.

She was always able to sit up with pillows at her back at meal times, and to move herself freely when being bathed or having the bedding changed. She declared she never spent her time so comfortably in bed before, and time never passed so rapidly. The ninth day she sat up awhile both morning and afternoon. The tenth day she dressed in the morning and was up for the day, and after that she returned to her usual housework and caring for baby herself, saying she never felt better in her life.

And now to return to baby. She was well oiled, band adjusted, warmly wrapped and left without a water bath until morning. During the night, when she acted as though she was very hungry, devouring her little fist, she was given warm water which she drank readily out of a spoon. She was not put to the breast until after she was twelve hours old. She was never allowed to nurse under four hours, but when she seemed uneasy, she was given warm water and would take from one ounce to one and a half ounces at a time.

In a week she was on a regular four-hour schedule, six, ten, two, six and ten o'clock, awaking once near midnight for a little water. At nine days she was sleeping straight through from the ten o'clock feeding at night until six in the morning, and has done so regularly ever sine.

Her mother is delighted and so am I, and I thank you for many of your articles, especially on the care of babies.

A READER.

This letter, though unduly long, is well worth publication in its entirety. It is unusually detailed and forcefully illustrates some of the cardinal principles for which Care of the Body has fought during this past quarter of a century. The mother who writes this is using a considerable quantity of native common sense which experience and sane reading have so ably given to her. This communication demonstrates that the pathology coincident with childbirth is largely manufactured, first and foremost, by the lack of intelligent preparation for the sacred function of motherhood and secondarily by current medical practices.

Under the "humanitarian" plea that it is necessary to save mothers from undue suffering and torture, injury is frequently done to both mother and babe.

It is a physiological impossibility to inject morphine or other stupefying drugs into the blood stream of the mother without its affecting the unborn child. I thoroughly [illegible] the other hand, if it becomes any question of choice between a few hours of suffering and the jeopardizing of the health and possibly the life of her baby, unhesitatingly I know the choice that every mother will take.

Regular medicine states that because most children are born alive, the anesthetic is relatively harmless. Their statistics are based upon the relative number of "still births" as contrasted to these children born alive.

Fourteen out of every hundred children born as you read this article will be dead at the close of one year. Of these fourteen, six will perish within the first fortnight after birth. There is not a doubt but that the terrible handicap of a blood stream laden with an anesthetic accounts for a considerable portion of this mortality.

It is true that the objective of the anesthetic is merciful but after all is that the main objective to be desired? If it were a matter of choice between humanitarianism having as its objective the prevention of suffering, and the health and life of either mother or child which would you choose?

This letter also startlingly brings out some of the stupidities in current medical practice. Every middle-aged woman who looks back in retrospect upon the nursing process knows some of the stories that are handed from one to another. "You must eat huge quantities of food in order to have plenty of milk." "You must drink beer, or chocolate or tea or coffee to have plenty of milk." "You must have plenty of strengthening chicken and good red steaks to have plenty of milk"—and so on and on it goes.

Every mother who has gone through the childbirth process knows of the afterpains and the cramps following the delivery. Many of them have also experienced the bitter disappointment when the milk "failed to come." Many have suffered heartaches when they have seen their babies terribly handicapped because the cow or the milk-can became their foster-mothers. An all-wise nature far too often refuses to have the precious milk supply polluted by the contaminating gases and in the absorption of foul intestinal waste.

Nature is infinitely wiser than all the doctors that are, or ever have been. She knows more than all the learned treatises of the wise men of every age. Trust in nature's power, mothers to be, and you will be well rewarded.

Open Fireplaces

WITH the coming of winter we people of Southern California do not of necessity concentrate upon the problem of creating warmth and physical comfort via the medium of coal and wood.

However, it is wise to prepare, in a lesser sense, for the cool winds of our modified winters in some manner or form. Some folks have gas heaters. Others use electric heaters. Others are blessed with the open fireplace.

The open fireplace—a relic of the days of yore, rapidly disappearing in the onslaught of new and different architecture.

There is nothing so comforting, so stirring, so fantastic and so dreamy as the flames of a sputtering fire. The crackle of burning wood, the conglomeration of color, the motion of flashing fire, the shadows of a darkened room invaded with heat waves stimulate the imagination and bring a sense of well being and comfort seldom attained.

Gather some wood. Pile on some coal or briquets. Gently nurse your little fire along and ere long you will bring unto yourself the balm of a rip-roaring dashing blaze, the peace of a darkened room, the restful, joy-giving, inspiring music of a sputtering log.

Movements of the Eyes

BOTH psychologists and physiologists base a considerable portion of their deductions on the appearance and action of the human eye. We all know of individuals who are shifty-eyed or of those who are stary eyed, those whose eyes are clear, those whose eyes are bleared. Each is indicative of a definite point in character or in physical state.

The following article, appearing in Rational Living, gives a few explanations of some of the things that occur in the movement of the eyes. It will give you a more ready understanding of visual function and perhaps enlighten you on some of the mental and physical reactions that may be interpreted from these movements.

"Since the time of Aristotle the movements of the eye have been an object of much scientific curiosity, and an immense amount of literature has been produced regarding them. But we still know comparatively little about them, because of the difficulty of harnessing the visual organ to any sort of registering apparatus. Within the last couple of decades, however, we have made considerable progress in this direction.

"The first registering devices were very clumsy and ineffective, but in the year 1898 Huey succeeded in producing one which worked very well. Developing an idea previously used by others, he attached a little plaster-of-paris cup, very light and thin, to the cornea, and connected it with an aluminum pointer which responded to the movements of the eye and traced a record of them on smoked paper. The cup adhered tightly to the cornea, which had been made insensitive, and a round hole in it permitted the subject to read; the other eye was free. The weight and friction of this apparatus were an obvious objection to it, though to a smaller extent than might have been anticipated. The photographic method in which the eye is not hampered by any attachments was a distinct improvement. Dodge photographed a beam of light reflected from the cornea, and Judd, replacing the light with a particle of Chinese white, used a kinetoscopic camera to photograph its movements.

"In these ways we have learned many interesting and important things. That ceaseless movement is the natural state of the eye is an obvious fact, but it required mechanical registration of this movement to show us that even when the eye seems to be still it is not so. When it appears to be looking at a point it is really going through a succession of minute and exceedingly slow movements. In the older ophthalmological literature we frequently find the term point of fixation. The newer writers say area or field of fixation.

"The movements of the eye are correlated with another peculiarity. Students of the processes of reading, which have been the subject of much careful experimentation, have found that one can take in a greater amount of printed matter in a glance of about a hundredth of a second than if one looks longer, the letters on the outskirts of the field of vision growing indistinct before one has had time to make them out, or name them if recognized. This is not a new observation. It is a commonplace of psychology that neither mental nor sensorial attention can be fixed upon an unchanging object, and Poe has told us that Venus herself will vanish from the firmament if we look at her too intently. By mechanical registration, however, we have

A Test Every Man Past 40 Should Make

Medical authorities agree that 65% of all men past middle age (many much younger) are afflicted with a disorder of the prostate gland. Aches in feet, legs and back, frequent nightly risings, sciatic pains, are some of the signs—and now, a member of the American Association for the Advancement of Science has written a remarkably interesting Free Book that tells of other symptoms and just what they mean. No longer should a man approaching or past the prime of life be content to regard these pains and conditions as inevitable signs of approaching age. Already more than 10,000 men have used the amazing method described in this book to restore their youthful health and vigor—and to restore the prostate gland to its proper functioning.

LEG SORES

THE LONG-LOOKED-FOR SECRET HAS BEEN FOUND

For a great many years millions of people have tried to heal these troubles with medicines alone and failed. A combination of everything necessary to use in cases of leg ulcers has been found. It is not a medicine, but a method. We teach you how to use it at home. More astonishing is that you do not have to lie in bed off the foot. The more you work and walk the quicker it heals. To stop the pain you now suffer is only a matter of a few hours. Now is your chance. Send at once for a free book, or call VISCOSE CO., 908 South Lake St., Los Angeles, Calif. Dunkirk 6039. ...from driving so far. Is this the way you treat visitors down here in Arizona?"

"When they've acted like you have, yes!"

She was an amazing girl. There was no doubt about it. Half a head shorter than Bob she stood—and the Vermonter was six foot one—built like a Juno and tempered like a valkyr. Her eyes were brown-topaz, her features ample, her color high with repressed excitement. The mass of her golden hair ended in a single, thick, hawser braid that fell to her supple waist behind.

Her pinto, however, promised trouble. Plainly it didn't approve of Bob's auto. It snorted, pranced, and showed the whites of its eyes.

"My dear young lady," cried the flabbergasted Bob, "I haven't the slightest idea what you're talking about."

"You get back to your car—and just to make sure you don't start off you lift up your hood."

Bob made a grimace. "Why lift my hood?"

"I'll show you. And don't you reach for your gun! If you do I'll settle you, stranger. I give you my word!"

Back toward the coupe the puzzled fellow moved, and the girl followed after—pulling the horse.

"Now up with that hood, or I'll drill you!"

With an uneasy laugh the Vermonter unclasped the spring-hooks and raised the great tin cover.

"Now you stand back! Get away ten or twelve feet. I could shoot these things out, but I'm takin' no chances on emptyin' my guns!" And springing toward the car, keeping him covered with one revolver, she struck savagely at his spark-plugs with the barrel of the other.

One, two, three, four, five, six blows she dealt beneath that hood. The engine went dead with an expiring back-fire and the spark-plug wires swung loosely. As quickly she sprang away—or perhaps the horse pulled her.

"Well," pronounced Bob, glassy-eyed, "you sure have raised hob with my bus. How far do you think I can go without spark-plugs?"

"Go? You're sticking right whar you are!"

"I'll say I am. Now what's it all about?"

"You start turnin' out what you got in your car. I want Griggs's money!"

"What's put it into your head I've got Griggs's money—whoever he may be?"

"Reckon the make o' your car is enough for me."

"Aren't you mistaking me for some one else?—and haven't you overlooked my Vermont license-plates?"

"I'm not aimin' to palaver much longer with you, stranger. You never was courtin' calamity closer than you happen to be right this minute!"

"I can't make head or tail of what it's all about, but you're going to owe me a whale of an apology in about five minutes." And the nettled, exhausted fellow turned toward his carefully packed machine. The vehement Amazon pulled the plunging pinto closer. Up toward the running board Bob lifted one foot. Suddenly he stumbled, lost his balance, lurched inward against the wheel. Down on the horn-knob came his heavy forearm.

Gr-r-r-r! The horn screeched shrilly, loudly, defiantly. It was a powerful, blood-curdling siren.

On steely hind legs the pinto reared in panic, then wheeled and staggered, whoofing wildly in terror. The bridle broke. Leaping clear of the ground, the horse went one way; its rider another.

Ten seconds later Bob Hobart held both guns and the girl a broken bridle. The bronc was racing down that riverbed, head and tail lifted, stirrups slashing against thorn-brush and greasewood. In twelve-foot jumps it vanished in the far-away pear.

Bob straightened, grinning. "Well, turn about's fair play," he bantered. "You put my bus on the blink. Now I've shooed off yours. Don't you think it's time to talk this little mess over?"

"G-g-g-give me my g-g-guns!"

"Let's see you get them."

The girl glanced down at her empty holsters.

"Waal, I reckon you've trumped my ace, stranger. That loco bronc has plumb busted everything!"

Bob "broke" the weapons, shaking out the cartridges and thrusting them in his trousers pocket. Producing his keys, he unlocked the lid of his running-board tool-box. In it he dropped both guns and snapped the lid back. "You really might hurt somebody with these, Miss Whatever-Your-Name-Is——?"

"My name's Wright," she announced, a bit defiantly.

"It's what?"

"Wright. Mary Wright, if it does you any good to know."

"Huh?"

"What's the matter with you? Can't you hear?"

Bob's jaw had dropped open. His eyes were wide. He pulled the rakish handkerchief from his forehead without taking his eyes from her face. "Heavens!" he gasped weakly.

"What ails you? What of it?"

"I'm bound for Pasadena—right now—to ask a girl named Mary Wright to—"

"Waal, what's so strange about that? Reckon thar's more'n one Mary Wright in this country. I got mail for another when I went one time to St. Louis, but look here, stranger, what you aimin' to do with me?"

"I'm not aiming to do anything with you—that I know of, yet."

"I don't quite get your game, stranger. You seem to talk and act like a gentleman."

"Why on earth shouldn't I?"

"But how could a man who talks and acts like a gentleman do such a rotten thing as to rob old Griggs?"

"I haven't robbed old Griggs—or anybody! Unless I did it in my sleep."

The sun had begun its descent down the west. Bob moved around with his back toward it, to get its glare from his eyes. The girl drew closer to the coupe, sinking down on its running-board weakly. "Whar was you at 9 o'clock this mawnin'?"

Bob reflected. "I'd say I was ten or twelve miles from Williams—heading this way."

"Can you prove it?" the girl demanded.

"I can prove I stopped on the camping-grounds in Williams, last night. I bought a new tire in a Williams garage just before sundown. That's it on my left hind wheel. Perhaps the bill, dated yesterday and receipted, would convince you I'm no desperado."

Bob found the paper in his wallet. He was carefully preserving all such to later compute the cost of his outing. Smoothing it out, he handed it across. Her face took on color. "And whar was you night befo' last?"

"Holbrook," he answered. "And the night before that I put up at the Harvey Hotel in Albuquerque. I've got that bill also."

"How'd you happen to be one lone man drivin' through the same stretch o' country in the same kind o' car as that eastern feller who looted old Griggs?"

"I didn't know I was. It's a stock car, this coupe. There's a thousand like it. Are you after a bandit—alone?"

"I was!"

"Where did this looting occur?"

"Down to Kelson, on the new State road to Prescott, about 7 o'clock last night. But it wasn't discovered till after the feller left this mawnin'."

"How far's this Kelson?"

"Ninety-eight mile—by the road. But the way I took across Pisgah Canon shortened it to thirty-one."

"As a matter of mileage, could I have been down around Kelson and in Williams, too?"

"No, reckon you couldn't, stranger."

"Were you responsible for making me detour, back there on the trail?"

She nodded.

"I kind o' figgered you'd come this way And when Mister Griggs offered a thousand dollars fo' recoverin' his money, and the Kelson Sheriff says 'get the bandit dead or alive, I reckoned I'd work my hunch. I brought some red chalk fo' the sign, and, stoppin' at the deserted shack in the canon fo' a board, I found the dummy—the posse used it last April to trick the Dyker boys the same way. Then when I saw you turn from the trail, I threw the sign away and followed you myself."

"Will your horse come back?"

"Reckon he won't—not without a bridle. He'll lope home to Kelson." She looked around in flaming mortification. "And now I've smashed your engine so you can't get out o' here yourself—and it's six miles back to the trail, with night comin' on. Oh, oh, oh!"

Ten seconds later Bob Hobart held both guns and the girl a broken bridle. The horse was racing down the river bed.

Bob sank on the sand. "Seems funny to be sitting here talking to a lady with the same name as the one I thought of asking to marry me. You live in Kelson, wherever it is?"

"I run a ranch a little way outside, with three or fo' cow-hands. I took over the place when my uncle died. I live thar with Hester. She's my cousin—and crippled. Are you really an easterner? You really come from Vermont?"

"A little one-horse town called Paris, away up in the heart of the mountains. Hobart's my name—Bob Hobart. I own a pulley-factory and machine-shop up there. But I had to break away this summer and see a bit of America before I settled down—or go crazy. Same old program from Monday morning till Saturday night. I thought I'd see something of the world when the war broke out. But I caught the flu down to Camp Devens. By the time I'd recovered the show was over."

"It's the first time you've ever been down here?"

"It's the only time I've been west of Chicago in my life."

Her gaze dwelt on him closer—his splendid physique, his wavy brown hair, the strength of his features, the kindly humor in his eyes, the wistfulness about his mouth. Her color rose. "You're goin' to be married, you said?"

He laughed raggedly. "It has just occurred to me that I couldn't conceive my Mary Wright starting off single-handed to bag a lone bandit. She'd faint at the very thought of it."

"Faintin' down here'd be laughed at." She glanced quickly up at the sun. "Say, it's goin' to be dark pretty quick; did you know it? And I've got you in an awful fix—if you're really not the pusson I thought you."

"Well, I give you my word of honor I'm not."

"I don't know what I can ever do to square myself."

"How far is it to the nearest telephone?"

"You'd have to go to Valentine, I guess. It isn't much further to Kelson."

"You mean I'm thirty-one miles from any garage?"

"Oh, I'm so sorry!" And the girl with the sun-flooded hair wilted over with her face in her hands. Then she straightened suddenly. "Mister Hobart, will you let me search your car?"

"For what?"

"If I don't find none of the things the bandit took from old Griggs's store, I'm goin' to penalize myself right proper."

"Go as far as you like. Looks as if I'd got to stay here till I find a way to fix that bus."

They began unloading the coupe together. Bedding came out; suitcases and cooking-utensils came off. He handed out a five-gallon canteen of luke-warm water, raising an eyebrow at her easy strength in swinging it behind her. Instinctively she sorted out his camping accessories.

"We'd better start a fire," she warned him, "while it's light enough to get the fuel."

"That's right," he agreed, "we had." But he scratched his head. "Out of what?"

"You wait here. I know what to do."

He watched her stride away down the rocks and up the opposite grade. He dropped idly down on the running-board, hammer swinging between his knees. What a pal—such a girl! He couldn't imagine the other Mary Wright saying, "You wait here. I know what to do. I've done it before." Mary Wright, formerly of Paris, Vt., would now be sitting helplessly up in this car, whimpering over their predicament.

Mary Wright of Kelson, Ariz., came back limping. But her arms were loaded with rakish roots from which the sand still sifted—a load for a man, by the way. "Fire them," she ordered. "They'll burn for hours."

She found pancake flour, mixed it in a twinkling, flipped the griddles dexterously, all the time squatting beside that spicy, crackling blaze. Coffee boiled. Bacon sizzled. She cooked their meal and they ate it together by the stranded car. The stillness shrieked at their eardrums.

"It is nice out here, isn't it?" the girl drawled languidly, leaning back against the machine. "Reckon I never noticed it in quite this way before."

"I know why this trip has been tiring me so," he blurted. "I've been driving it alone."

"Yes. Reckon it is nicer to have company along."

He lighted a brier. Never had shag tobacco tasted so delectable. "You can't go walking thirty-one miles anywhere in the dark, Miss Wright," he said suddenly.

"Land's sake, did you think I meant to? I'm not afeered o' staying out all night. I do it half the year, lookin' after my ranch. What's the matter with you? What you all fussed up about?"

"Well back in my part of the country people might think this situation—"

"Would they? Folks down here are sensible. Pshaw! I ain't afeered o' companyin' you till mawnin'."

She was like her Yavapai county—big, open, frank, artless.

Bob sprang up and stalked away. In one vast, overwhelming revelation he knew what he wanted. And Fate had brought him three thousand miles across great America to show it to him.

The stars came out—desert stars—great, low-hung flares of yellow incandescence. The burnt orange and old rose of the mountains faded. A cold wind stirred the greasewood. Night was upon them.

The man looked up directly overhead. The Milky Way came steadily into its own. How high it was! How vast, beautiful, terrific, was the world which God had made!

Ghostly hoots began sounding off at their left like moans of phantoms that were haunting that basin. "Those are owls, aren't they?" the man whispered. And the woman nodded. Her face was cupped by her hands as she sat cross-legged before the coals. Brown-topaz eyes were copper now, her silhouetted head a tracing of infinite grace. Slowly, slowly, the embers died.

"I'll go out to the trail in the mawnin' and pay some one to come in here and tow you to Kingman," she promised him.

CARE OF THE BODY

tines of dogs, and such are the differences between the human and the canine bowel that when I came to operate on man I found that I was much hampered by my new experience. I had every thing to unlearn, and that my experience had done little but to unfit me to deal with the human intestine.

"That man is a believer in vivisection; he is an authority upon surgery. He is an authority upon that kind of surgery which has yielded the great glory for its art and science in modern times; and, in the quotation I have made, he has thrown overboard experiments on animals. And I say, in the question of ligature and suture, we owe nothing to vivisection whatever.

"Professor Lawson Tait, whose name you can conjure with in every city on the continent of Europe, was perhaps the most brilliant and successful abdominal surgeon of his time, and what did he tell us? That as long as ever he operated upon the basis of experimentation on animals he did nothing but lose his patients, but directly he gave that up he began to save them. And another thing he said in a letter in my possession, 'Vivisection has done nothing for surgery but lead to horrible bungling.'

"Take another important operation—that of the removal of stone from the kidney: and here I will quote another authority who believes in vivisection—no less an authority than Sir Henry Morris, who held the position of President of the Royal College of Surgeons, when he told the Royal Commission recently under cross-examination:—

"'The operation that I did in the first place, and which I was the first to do, was done irrespective of any experiments on animals; that is the cutting out of the stone from the kidney. This was from knowledge acquired by experience from operations on the liver and other organs in the human subject.'

"You may turn where you like, and you will realize the truth of my contention that the great claim of the vivisector is not fulfilled insurgery, and that the greatest authorities in abdominal surgery themselves confess that experiments on animals have nothing to do with their success. I will take the greatest vivisector of the day, and put him into the witness box, and we will hear what he has to say on the subject, namely Professor Starling. When he was cross examined recently, before the Royal Commission, he said:—

"'The last experiment must always be on man.'

"If, then, the last experiment must always be on man, does it not stand to reason that the first scientific experiment must also be on man? and if the first scientific experiment must be on man, then it is perfectly clear that all preceding experiments upon the lower animals must have been unsatisfactory and inconclusive.

"But now I will take another subject in connection with surgery—that is brain surgery, for, of course, there is very little surgery to be done in the thoracic region. The alleged triumphs of surgery belong chiefly to the brain and abdomen.

"We hear a good deal about brain surgery. We are told thousands of lives have been saved because of the discovery of the localization of the brain centers, and that this discovery was due entirely to experiour opponents deal in big figures, and very strong language. Unfortunately for them, we get very few statistics published about brain surgery, whilst the abdominal surgeons are prepared to record their victories and triumphs, the brain surgeons are very careful not to do so. We have challenged Sir Victor Horsley again and again, but he declines to bring forward statistics. We know how true it is in many of the brain surgical cases of today that 'the operation is successful, but the patient dies.'

"Now, with regard to the localization of the brain centers. Is it true we have gained that knowledge from experiments on monkeys' brains?

"Charcot, a great French authority, and perhaps the greatest authority upon the brain that ever lived, declared there was nothing we could learn from an animal's brain except the topography of the animal's brain.

"We all know that if there is one thing more than another in which the human differs from the sub-human it is in the character of the brain, and here again is a point in which you may rely upon it, we cannot possibly argue from animals to man.

"About three years ago Dr. Samuel West, as president of the Medical Society in London, gave an address on this very subject, and he then announced to his audience that all our knowledge of the brain centers depend upon the work of Dr. Hughlings Jackson, and he never performed an experiment on an animal in his life.

"How did he arrive at this conclusion? They were scientific results, and he obtained them from the human subject. He watched his patients by the bedside; he saw the symptoms and physical signs that were developed as a result of some lesion in the brain, and then he carefully examined those brains afterward in the deadhouse, and proved that in those cases, one after another, certain symptoms always bore relation to certain brain lesions, and thus before he died he was able to show, scientifically, cause and effect, and map out the brain into the various centers, showing what centers would be affected when certain results of irritation or pressure took place in the human body. That was true scientific investigation.

"And here let me point to one center, the center of speech. Just above the ear, upon the posterior lobe of what is called the third left frontal convolution, there is a strange little center that governs speech. We know that center. I had a case only a short time ago, which I was able to diagnose immediately as a case of paralysis of speech, caused by a little hemorrhage in that particular center of the brain. Now tell me, how can you possibly discover the speech center in a human brain by experiments upon an animal that cannot talk? And if you can discover a delicate center such as that without experiments on living animals, there should be no difficulty whatever in discovering the other coarser centers, without resort to barbarism of that description. So much then for surgery, whether abdominal or of the brain."

Malaria

THROUGHOUT great sections of territory we find whole populations afflicted with malaria. In the warmer climates especially, where little attention is paid to sanitation and hygiene and much less to factors of diet, malaria annually reaps its toll in countless thousands of lives and the loss of millions of dollars.

It is quite customary to speak of malaria-infested countries largely because we know some of the contributing causes responsible for malaria. That is, where we find the mosquito "anopheles," there do we find malaria. To a considerable extent malaria infestation and the presence of mosquitoes are identical.

One should know something about this disease, especially if one is compelled to reside in a country where malaria is prevalent. Direct infection comes to some from the bite of the mosquito. The mosquito has, in turn, been infected and is merely giving up some of its poisonous by-products into the blood of its victim. The germ involved is known as the plasmodian malaria, a tiny little animalcule carried in the body of the mosquito. It is parasitic and develops in both the mosquito and in man.

There are several types of malarial fever. The commonest is that associated with alternate chill and fever, accompanied by headache, coldness of the body and the extremities, cyanosis or bluish discoloration of the skin, together with pain and headache. The chill may last from a few minutes to several hours and is often attended by vomiting and nausea. Immediately following comes the fever. The patient feels hot, the face becomes flushed, the heart rapid and the pulse full. The temperature may vary from time to time, sometimes going as far as 104 to 105. The pain may be distributed throughout the body. It usually effects the head or limbs. It may last from several hours to several days.

This entire grouping of symptoms lasts about twenty-four hours and constitutes the cycle of the malarial paroxysm. Bacteriologically it signifies a definite evolution of the germs present in the blood. Periodically the germs burst from the individual blood cells in which they are encased and new generations of germs evolve. That is the reason for the periodic nature of the alternate chill and fever, dependent upon the internal development of the germ colony.

From a social aspect the overcoming of malaria of course depends upon public hygiene and sanitation. The prevention of the development of mosquitoes by means of furnishing drainage to swamps, cesspools and to other areas where mosquitoes develop is the only sensible method.

Of course with that must come the increase in immunity of the average individual. It is true that the mosquito bite may be the immediate cause of malaria but in its final analysis undoubtedly the individual resistance determines whether one acquires the disease or the degree of susceptibility.

Many thousands of people have thoroughly saturated themselves with quinine and still unfortunately have malaria. Many thousands of others are suffering far more from quinine poisoning than from the actual malaria.

Get away from the malaria-infested zone. Change to a dry climate that is known to be free from the infestation of the mosquito. Build up resistance and vitality by diet, exercise, sunshine, proper nervous control and all the other phases of rational, natural living. Then malaria will come under the same category as any other disease—thoroughly capable of being overcome if we but understand the laws of health.

Natural Childbirth

REDWOOD CITY, Cal.

Dr. Lovell:

Would you be interested in hearing of the success which was mine in handling my first "baby case?"

I have been much interested in your articles on the care of mothers and babes, so when a neighbor asked me if I would care for her during confinement, which would be in about six weeks, I gave her a number of your articles to read and told her I had never cared for such a case (I have five children of my own, however,) but those were my sentiments and if she was willing for me to care for her, as I understood those articles, I was willing to try.

I found she had been living an ideal life for a pregnant woman—eating mostly fresh fruits and vegetables, with plenty of outdoor exercise in her flower and vegetable garden.

At 6 p.m., August 26, I was called and the doctor summored. The doctor arrived in about an hour and came bustling into the room with two huge, formidable-looking hand-bags, which he deposited close by the bed. After an official examination, he proceeded to take from one of the bags a hypo-

The Flapper Paramount

By Alma Whitaker

THE head of the advertising firm was making a few caustic remarks upon the subject of the business girl.

He made it known that he strongly disapproved of bobbed hair, short skirts, short sleeves and touched-up faces.

He was not, he remarked, going to have the office looking like a musical comedy chorus.

The girls discussed him pretty freely in the dressing-rooms—referring to him frequently as "that old grouch."

But apart from that there was no evidence that they were aware of his disapproval. They appeared on the following Monday shorter all over—shorter boyish bobs, shorter skirts, shorter sleeves—it was the shortest Monday the office had ever known.

He called the head girl and registered infuriated indignation. She herself had long hair—having reluctantly resisted temptation. But $5 a week extra seemed to justify the sacrifice.

"You can tell those girls they are all fired," snorted the head of the firm. "I won't have a bunch of silly flappers around."

"They are good girls, they know their work, they fill their jobs well," protested the head girl, anxiously. "Surely you won't fire them just because of how they look. Anyway, it's the style."

"Style or no style, when I give orders they are going to be obeyed," shouted the head of the firm.

"Shall I advertise for long-haired girls in 1905 styles of clothes?" meekly asked the head girl. "And hadn't I better keep these girls till we get the other ones in?"

So they compromised on that. It was sort of awkward—they needed eleven new girls, and there didn't seem that number of long-haired, long-skirted, long-sleeved girls in town. Anyway, only a couple answered the advertisement. And they hadn't been "girls" for a long while.

The head of the firm gazed upon them distastefully.

Besides, the situation was incredible. Why the blazes couldn't the girls he had, who knew the work, respond with proper humility to his taste in appearances? What on earth was the world coming to when a man of affairs had to hire a lot of flashy flappers?

Was the only alternative a couple of meek, unctuous dubiously efficient old hens?

"You might try advertising for married women," suggested the head girl. "Or widows with families to support. They might meet your requirements better. But young girls . . . well, they do like to follow the styles."

But the result of that was even more alarming. Plenty of applicants this time—but mercy, many a dame who admitted to thirty-eight, sick husbands, dependent children, or a mortgage on the home, frisked in looking more like "No, No, Nanette" or "Lady, Be Good."

Why, would you believe it, some of those dames were shorter bobbed, shorter skirted, shorter sleeved than any of the reprehensible staff incumbents who were about to lose their jobs.

The head of the firm was quite nasty about it. Great Jehosophat, what was the matter with the women?

"I shall be very sorry to lose little Rosy," murmured the head girl, deprecatingly. "Of course, she does dress rather—er . . . and is a bit too liberal with the lipstick. But we have never had anyone who could meet the public quite like she does. She has a way with her. She knows all the clients and is so cute helping them fix up their copy. And Barbara is quite wonderful with the files, even if her skirt is a leetle too short . . ."

The girls discussed him pretty freely, referring to him as "that old grouch."

"They are a disgrace to the office," he snapped. "Painted, silly dolls. And with that idiotic short hair—ugh!"

"They are very competent," murmured the head girl insistently.

That was the evening the head of the firm confided his woes over the dinner table.

"Gosh, Walter, you old idiot," remarked the banker, "I have been employing girls for thirty years. And I want to tell you that these smart little flappers of today are more businesslike and capable than any generation of girls we ever hired. I like 'em to be stylish and cute. I like a girl to belong to her own age and era. What does a dab of lipstick, more or less, or long or short hair or long or short skirts matter, if they do their work well? I wouldn't swap my little stenographer for anyone—gee, I am worried to death for fear she'll get married on me—but she would soon tell me where I got off if I tried my rules about how she should dress."

"You are a back number, old man," grinned the judge. "We have the niftiest little bunch of flappers you ever saw 'round our office and smart as they make 'em. Several of 'em are college graduates, too. All of 'em graduated with honor from high schools. Nothing wrong with the insides of their heads. Say, but you've got your nerve to try to tell bright girls how to dress in these days."

"What you seem to want is a lively, capable, young, independent, clever, loyal, hard-working, highly modern young woman, with hopelessly old-fashioned notions about the superior taste and judgment of the lord of creation," grinned the banker, "but you can't have it both ways. And you admit yourself that there are not enough of your kind of employer left for even the older women to cater to. You want the competence of today with the meek, retiring humility of yesterday . . . your ideas are mouldy, old fogeyish . . . what is a man like you doing at the head of a big modern advertising business? Are you trying to make your clients advertise in old-fashioned ways? Haven't you brought the rest of your business up to date? Aren't you employing girls where you used to employ men because you found the girls better suited to the work?"

"You are all wrong—but I realize I am trying to sweep back the flapper wave in vain," conceded the head of the firm.

"Three long-haired, long-skirted, long-sleeved spinsters waiting to see you, sir," said the head girl next morning.

"Can't seem 'em, too busy," remarked the head of the firm.

And two weeks later the head girl bobbed her own.

The Soup

When we sat down to dinner and the soup was served our host remarked disgustedly: "Soup's cold! Filthy stuff. Have it taken away."

"Filthy stuff," she echoed sweetly—and swept the plate off the table, on to the floor, the while her spouse gazed in horror and alarm.

"We shall not have soup. Bring us the fish," she told the astonished maid-servant.

Not a soul mentioned soup again. Our friend has secured his model wife.

the problem should be borne in mind. Levin has shown that the intestinal tracts of white bears, seals, reindeer, eider ducks and other animals inhabiting the arctic regions are sterile, but when these same animals are brought to a temperate climate, they readily acquire intestinal bacteria. We may assume that the same is true of the human inhabitants of the Arctics. Since intestinal autointoxication is due to the operation of putrefactive bacteria, it is easy to understand why the same standards of comparison cannot be employed, and the fact that the people of the Far North eat large quantities of flesh and blubber with impunity does not justify one in assuming that a [illegible] functional [illegible] of the temperate zone can do likewise.

"Regarding the time required for food material to traverse the alimentary canal, no extensive information is available. Observers passing a series of very fine colored beads through the tracts of many healthy individuals recently found that in man only 15 per cent were passed the first day, and 40 per cent the second day; the remainder requiring one week or more to come through. Such experiments point strongly to the potential danger associated with the consumption of foods which easily putrefy, such as meat.

"The main function of the large intestine normally is to withdraw water from the intestinal contents. It has been shown on dogs, however, that removal of 75 per cent or more of the small intestine does not appreciably influence the animal's health, so that the larger intestine is undoubtedly capable of assmilation under certain conditions.

"Alverez has shown that if certain finely powdered materials are introduced into the rectum, they may be recovered in the mouth several hours later. The coated tongue and foul breath are usually due to migration upward, so to speak, of some of the intestinal contents. This reverse peristalsis generally occurs at night, and may help, in a measure, to explain the operation of autointoxication. In order to appreciate the danger of toxic absorption, it should be remembered that a bacterial cell may arrive at maturity and reproduce in fifteen minutes, whereby the progeny of a single bacterium in twenty-four hours would be numbered by millions. About 50 per cent of the total nitrogen of the faeces is contained in the bodies of dead bacteria.

"It is often asserted that the canine teeth of man offer unmistakable evidence as to his past carnivorous tendencies. However, those who have studied the habits of the gorilla in its native haunts tell us that the animal uses its large canine teeth solely to fight its enemies. So also the wild boar, an exclusively vegetarian animal, with massive protruding canines, which serve for purposes of defense when attacked.

"Man and animals whose food is of a starchy nature have teeth admirably adapted for grinding purposes, while flesh-eating animals, in whom salivary digestion is a minor matter, have teeth that are efficient for tearing and cutting, but are useless for grinding. Classification of animals according to the characteristics of their teeth has been accomplished by such early eminent sientists as Hunter, Cuvier, Owen and Huxley."

What Caused Surgery to Advance?

THE advocates of vivisection furnish as one of their leading arguments for the necessity of continuing this practice the statement that without animal vivisection surgery could not have advanced to its present stage.

The following article, a copy of a speech delivered by Dr. Walter Hadwen, M. D. of London, contradicts some of the claims under which this practice justifies itself.

"There have been enormous advances in surgical art. These advances have been almost entirely limited to surgery in the abdominal region. That is where practically all the great discoveries or advances in surgical art have been made. There is scarcely an organ, there is scarcely a growth of any kind in any organ of the abdominal region, but can be successfully removed by the surgeon.

"What is the ground for all this advance? Immediately the pro-vivisector says 'experiments on animals!' All our advances in surgery, we are told, depend upon experiments upon animals.

"There are three things that have brought about this magnificent result. The first was the discovery of anaesthetics. By the discovery of anaesthetics the surgeon was able to take his time about his work; he was able to do it thoroughly; he was not worried to death and tortured in his mind by the thought of the agony he was inflicting on the patient on the operating table. Anaesthetics were the first foundation of successful advance in surgery. Anaesthetics had nothing to do with experiments on animals, for anaesthetics—ether, chloroform, and so on—were discovered by the discoverers' experiments upon themselves.

"And here let me say that this is a character of vivisection to which I have no objection, for as long as the vivisectors will be content to experiment upon one another I should let them go on with it until further orders. But I say don't be so cowardly, whilst you talk of your wonderful self-sacrifice and all the rest of it, as to be afraid to prove it. Don't be torturing these poor things that cannot help themselves.

"The first foundation was anaesthetics, and the second was the adoption of septic methods in surgery—that is, absolute cleanliness. It has nothing to do with experiments on animals; nothing whatever. It was simply the outcome of common sense. We know in days gone by it was considered the proper thing for a surgeon always to keep one dirty coat, that he had perhaps used for twenty years, hanging behind the operating theater door, in which to perform his operation, and dirt was considered to be of no importance whatever; dirty surgery was the order of the day. Semmelweis, who never performed an experiment upon an animal in his life, was the first to introduce clean surgery into hospital practice, and by means of that he was able to reduce the death rate in the maternity wards in Vienna, (which had been 12 per cent in one year—1847-48,) to 1 per cent. This had nothing to do with experiments on animals.

"Three English surgeons, Lawson Tait, Granville Bantock, and Sir William Savory, followed the same lines, at a time when Listerism, or what is called antisepsis, was the fashion over the whole world. They were ridiculed by the profession, but their successes could not be denied. At last Lord Lister gave up the dangerous carbolic spray, and diluted the carbolic solution to a degree which certainly preserved the tissues from injury, but was too weak to kill the germs. Lister, by trying to kill germs, had been killing his patients. What is now the practice in our best hospitals is simply asepsis, or strict surgical cleanliness such as was practised by the eminent surgeons I have named.

"Now, the third thing in connection with successful abdominal surgery was the discovery of the right kind of ligature and suture, that is, the sort of thread that might be used to tie or sew together the organs that were to be left behind in the abdominal cavity, so that there might not be irritation or inflammation set up, resulting in septic poisoning, or that the patient might not die through the ligature becoming rapidly absorbed, and the blood vessels giving way. This discovery of the right kind of ligature is practically the whole question in abdominal surgery. Did we learn how to ligature or suture correctly by experiments on the lower animals?

"Now, there is one man who stands out today above all others, I suppose, as the leading authority upon abdominal surgery. I refer to Sir Frederick Treves, in his speech delivered at Birmingham, in October, 1898, and published in the Lancet, on November 5, 1898, said as follows:

"Many years ago, I carried out on the continent sundry operations upon the inteswho had been a patient at the California Clinorium brought in a sick friend a few days ago. When we asked her how she had been feeling since she completed her treatments about six months ago she said, "Just fine," and surprised us by proposing a plan to tell everybody what we were doing at the California Clinorium to restore people to health.

She Said

"Is there not some way that you can let everybody that is sick know how much you can do for them at the California Clinorium?

"When I came here I did not care whether I lived or died, as I felt so miserable and I had been doctoring for over five years."

"Dr. Shingle found out what was wrong and now I feel so good that I am busy all day with church and club work and am on the go from morning to night.

Why Don't You

obtain testimonials from people like me who know what it means to be restored to health as I would be glad to tell anyone who is sick and in despair as I was."

We Explained

that we did not believe in using testimonials—anybody can get them for anything—and preferred to let our work speak for itself. And it is, for we have had to increase our facilities again to take care of more patients. Dr. Shingle, Dr. Jahr and our nurses are always busy but not so busy but that with our new equipment they can give the same careful individual attention as always.

When People Realize

as our patients do that when they come to the California Clinorium these is no guessing at what is wrong, no treating of symptoms but a careful, thorough three-day examination with the X-Ray and other diagnostic agents in the hands of doctors who know how to find the cause of their trouble. Every vital organ is carefully studied while functioning and when this examination is completed Dr. Shingle is able to say "The cause of your illness is some certain condition. You need certain treatments, certain food, certain exercise and such or such a change in your mode of living." Then all of our resources are at your command to restore you to health.

Avoid Gas After Eating

Bloating and distention of the abdomen, drowsiness after eating, pressure and pain around the heart, hands and feet cold and numb, nervousness, are the more common symptoms of this torment—gas.

All is due to the fermenting of food in the stomach.

Physicians state that the best absorbent they have found for this foul gas is Hylands No. 10 Gastritis. These little tablets also quickly relieve the pain and distress that come after eating.

If people would only give some attention to their diet and carry these wonderful tablets for emergency use, they would quickly find that many of these ailments and symptoms would permanently disappear. THE RACING FOOL

He Returned as the King of Speed to the Town in Which He Had Been an Outcast

By Gerald Beaumont

FADING sunlight yielded to purple shadows that curtained a vast speedway from which sixty thousand people were making their way toward fleets of motorcars and long lines of suburban trains. High in the covered stands, a band was playing: "Oh, Gee! If It Only Was Me!" And down below, the voice of "Bill the Dogman" addressed the departing spectators of the Knickerbocker Cup Race:

"Well, well, folks, don't go 'way hungry! Get your official hot dogs! Self-startin' sausages, folks! The latest models, fully equipped and thoroughly lubricated! Get your inclosed Frankfurter Special—it's a wow! A dime, and you drive it away! Who's the next gent?"

Into a dressing-room under the stands staggered three men, Blubber Doyle, pit manager for the Butterfly team; young Cheever, the mechanician; and between them the Black Ghost—"Wild Tom" Meredith, hero of the five-hundred-mile classic just concluded.

Meredith's arms were around the shoulders of his supporters. Oil and dust formed a mask out of which stared eyes that were flat and lifeless as those of a fish. His long legs dragged helplessly.

"Get him on the table," panted Doyle. "Swing him up! Now give me your knife. . . . No, no! You can't bend his arms! Cut his clothes off, Easy, Tom! Easy, old champ! Let go of everything! It's all over—just let go!"

Silence, save for the ripping of gaberdine cloth. Then the pit-pat of palms against naked flesh, and the all-pervading odor of liniment. The man on the table held forth his right arm pleadingly. The fingers were curved stiffly to the shape of the driving-wheel.

Doyle and Cheever bent over the suffering man, rubbing the knotted muscles, covering the dull eyes with hot cloths, massaging the long limbs, striving to restore circulation and alleviate his distress.

Downtown, the sporting extras were already on the streets proclaiming in headlines the triumph of the wild man of the speedways. They carried pictures of the hero, photos taken before the race, revealing clean-cut, good-humored features wreathed in the smile that press photographers insist shall be worn by every celebrity on whom they train a camera.

"Lucky dog!" said the public. "Twenty thousand for an afternoon's work!" Guess he earned it, at that! Sure some drivin' fool! He'll get his, some day, they all do!"

Under the vigorous massage Meredith gradually relaxed. Back of the closed eyes a tired mind was trying to figure how much would be left of the twenty thousand dollars and the lap-prizes after he had split with his backers, rewarded his mechanic and pit-crew, paid up his season's debts and laid aside necessary funds for a campaign on the Coast. The problem was too much for him.

Ten years of life on the speedways of America had tamed the soul of Wild Tom Meredith. In the eyes of the public he was still the captivating figure of old.

Press-agents had woven around him a thousand colorful tales, and his mission in life had been to live up to what was said of him. No man had striven harder to keep faith with the public. He was the supreme drawing-card in a motor-mad age, a racing driver whose name was synonymous with all that was picturesque and romantic in a game where life is a candle wavering in the wind.

In reality, Wild Tom Meredith was now a quiet, serious man of thirty-five, whose real story, if he had one, was unknown to his associates. He was one of a small fraternity of profesional drivers, numbering but a few dozens out of a population of one hundred and twenty millions, who traveled over the country in answer to the call of a public which demanded its thrill-glutted holidays.

The white belt and white shoes that set off the black costume were not of Meredith's selection. Langfield, who guided the destinies of the Butterfly team, had demanded distinctive attire. It was Langfield who had wished upon him the sobriquet of "Wild Tom." It was Teddy Langfield who tipped off a newspaper man to what was supposed to be a professional secret among the drivers. Tom Meredith was particularly wild during the full of the moon!

"You don't have to take my word for it," said Langfield. "Ask any of the boys. He's crazy anyway, but when the old moon is round as a balloon tire, none of the mechanics will ride with him. Go see Hans Wanser or De Pulva—they carry calendars with the full moon dates marked in red ink, and if Meredith's booked to drive at that time, you'll see those birds go to the pits early in the race and stay there!"

This was one of the few stories that had any basis other than the imagination of a press-agent. Most racing drivers had their pet superstitions, and sufficient had happened to warrant the friendly caution in the dressing-room: "Look out for Wild Tom when the moon's full."

Now, the strain was telling on the man who had been a public idol for a decade. The game had made him its slave. Far from bringing him the independence and quiet harbor of which he dreamed, each new triumph but whetted the public appetite and added to his obligations. His expenses increased, welding new chains of bondage, while the margin of years that remained to him grew less and less. None knew better than Wild Tom the true significance of the checkered flag, symbol of victory on the speedway. This was a game of sunshine and shadow, and the shadows predominated.

But he was not afraid. Physical fear formed no part of his make-up. He had seen Death grinning at him from behind a thousand trees and telegraph poles. He had flashed at one hundred and thirty miles an hour on tracks like glass, and thundered over freak courses so rough that he only knew he was on the track by the fence on either side. Men had been burned to death under cars that he was compelled to pass again and again without knowing whether the victim was Bill or Harry or Joe. More than once he had been spattered against a fence, and had awakened in an "anatomy garage" to find, much to his astonishment, that he had cheated the undertaker again.

No, he was not afraid! But the routine of the professional driver's life had satiated his soul and filled him with rebellion. The same old questions from young reporters. The never-ending round of entertainment from chambers of commerce, motor clubs and speedway promoters. The official receptions, the stag dinners.

Diana regarded him with tear-filled comprehending eyes.

Everywhere they went, particularly in the small towns, enthusiastic officials labored under the delusion that it was necessary to show the boys a good time. They thought that because Wild Tom Meredith could circle a track faster than any other man in history, his morals and temperament were in tune with his car.

Nor could he dodge these entertainments, for they were arranged in good faith by the promoters of the meets, and his presence was a matter of contract requirement. After all, it was part of the game—the necessary steps toward awakening community interest and enthusiasm in support of an approaching race.

All this has been told to show what manner of man it was who had won the Knickerbocker Cup Race and was thereafter carried to his room to be put to bed by a veteran of the pits and a youngster who had yet to learn the full drama of the game.

Hidden in a blue-grass valley that resembles nothing so much as "old Kentuck'," and only thirty miles from San Francisco as the crow flies, the little town of Calora drowsed in the sunlight and meditated on the past.

Once Calora had known the glory of a rare prosperity. That was in the heyday of California's "silver spendthrifts," a half-century ago, when fair women and fast horses formed the toast of millionaires.

The quaint charm of this secluded village was discovered by first one wealthy sportsman and then another. Haciendas were established on the hills, and presently these looked down upon a race-track owned and operated by men whose names were known nationally, and to whom money meant but little.

But these things passed with the generation that was responsible for them. Calora had been the toy of rich men, and in an age of commercialism such toys were shelved.

A great water corporation spread its tentacles over the valley, throttling all efforts at development. Rural it was, and rural it remained, a study in still-life—the only community in California that had not grown in forty years.

Calora was off the beaten paths, those broad macadam highways, along which the State's development has taken place. Nor could Calora, of its own resources, build the necessary concrete roads to connect up with a system by which her more fortunate sister communities profited.

Calora lapsed into a Sleepy Hollow state of existence—a quaint village so utterly unlike any other in the Golden State that one motion-picture director shot it as "My Old Kentucky Home." And the only way of improving the picture would have been to have used Diana Davis in the lead. For Diana was as different from other girls as Calora was unlike other towns.

No doubt the Bard was right, and there is nothing in a name. Nevertheless, to young Tom Meredith, who was born and raised in Calora, Diana Davis suggested the mystic beauty of the moonlight—calm, serene, virginal, yet potent with a charm that soothed his restless soul.

She was the daughter of the village minister, and he the son of the town drunkard, and of course they were in love! Deeply in love!

Young Meredith's sins were all prompted by the restlessness that beset his soul. His father had been a gentleman, and a sportsman—a lover of fast horses, one of the small group of millionaires who squandered their wealth on Calora in the early days. He was the only one who stayed—stayed until he had drunk himself into a pauper's grave after he had been pointed to for years as the town's horrible example.

Small wonder that Calora looked with suspicion on this man's son, and that Tom Meredith in turn looked forward to the day when he could escape from his native town and never return.

There was only one who seemed to understand him better than he understood himself, and on moonlight nights he crept to their rendezvous, the sweet-scented magnolia tree that marked the entrance to Diana's home. There he worshiped as reverently as though he were standing at a shrine.

In the daytime he hated the ugly little town where nothing ever happened. But at night, when the shadows brought their veil of illusion, a strange exaltation came to him.

The time came when the wild obsession to run beyond the limits of a country road, became too strong to resist. All of a tremble, he sought his sweetheart one night, and pleaded passionately that she embark with him upon the Great Adventure.

And Diana kissed him on the forehead and regarded him with tear-filled, comprehending eyes, the while she shook her head and bade him go forth alone.

"Not that I don't love you, dear," she told him. "I do and oh, so well! But this would be foolish and wrong, very wrong. For one thing, it would kill my father; and for another, I am afraid—afraid for both of us."

"Why?" he demanded.

Diana shook her head, plucking thoughtfully at the leaves of a magnolia blossom. "Life isn't all moonlight, Tommy. A man's place is in the sun, and you won't be happy—won't really understand yourself—until you've gone out alone into the big world and fought and won. That's what you need now, dear, more than you need the moonlight and me! You want glory, action and the respect and admiration of even your home town. Go away, Tommy—I know you have to go; and sometime Calora and I will both be proud to welcome you back. Good-by, dear, and God's luck!"

Their lips met for the first time, and the vision that he bore away with him, as he trudged down the dark aisle of sycamores, was Diana waving farewell in the moonlight.

It took Tom Meredith three years to find himself.

Somehow the word drifted back to Calora

when they mix the milk-souring germs with the "bad" intestinal germs, it is a wonderful spectacle to behold, for the milk germs destroy the disease germs.

Always, following closely on the heels of scientific discoveries we find commerce ever alert toward new opportunities. In almost less time than it takes to tell, the great germ killers known under various titles, bacillus bulgaricus, or bacillus acidophulus, or bacillus lactus, or in fact by almost any other trade name, were found on the market at so much per piece, per ounce, or per squirt.

For almost twenty-five years millions of dollars have been made from the exploitation of millions of people for millions of ailments. And even as I write this the everlasting pursuit of the nebulous chimera of health is still going merrily on.

Now what are the facts of physiology and what truth is there in this juggling of the germs?

In normal physiology we have countless billions of bacteria always present in the thirty feet of intestinal tube. These bacteria are absolutely essential toward the maintenance of life and toward the conversion, of food into its waste by-products. Without them the digestive process could be maintained. A sterile bowel is inconceivable and utterly incapable of maintenance. Most bacteria are our friends rather than our enemies.

When the bacillus bulgaricous or any modification of it is introduced into the intestinal tract via the patented buttermilks or other mixtures, its cannibalistic properties of eating other germs is manifested often too well. It frequently makes a clean sweep of all intestinal germs, destroying friend and enemy alike. It makes no differentiation. Temporarily, the digestive process is aided especially when the bowels are clogged with foul, fetid wastes which have remained for a considerable length of time.

In a brief while, however, as the germ destruction is going on apace. Nature is robbed of its protective bacteria. The necessary changes in the fecal wastes are hindered or sometimes stopped. The stools change in color. They become more difficult to discharge. Constipation becomes accentuated.

Buttermilk or other forms of artificially fermented milks undoubtedly have a part to play in the temporary relief of acute symptoms of autointoxication. However, one should not rely on them as a permanent means of procuring internal cleanliness. Correct the diet which has been responsible for the intoxication.

Vegetarianism

THE following article written by Dr. Edward Howell and appearing in Dr. Lindlahr's magazine is a splendid symposium on the cause of vegetarianism.

We who espouse a vegetarian ideal in diet are by no means freaks or faddists nor can we in any way be accused of being extremists. Vegetarianism is the sequence of sound common-sense investigation, the logical way of living after one has studied the question intensively.

This article is being published in two installments. The second part will appear in next week's issue.

"The problem of flesh-eating has engaged the attention of speculative minds for many years. The psysiologist is reluctant to commit himself to any principle that is not proved beyond doubt. But we daily meet many serious problems which demand immediate action. With a view to formulating a reasonable working hypothesis for practitioners and those interested in the preservation of health, the following is submitted in the belief that it will show light upon a much debated question from a new angle—the findings of comparative anatomy and physiology.

"In studying the alimentary systems of various species of mammalia, one is struck by the almost constant relationship existing between the length of the animal's intestinal tract and the nature of its food. The reason for this relationship will become apparent later in the article. These measurements are in inches; needless to say many of them are only approximate. The length of the trunk is taken from the occipital protuberance to the coccyx.

"It will be seen from this table that the so-called frugivorous animals closely approximate man in the proportionate length of the intestines as compared with the length of the trunk. The proportion in both instances may be represented by the numeral 11. In the pure carnivorous group, this proportion is generally considered among anatomists as about 3½, while in the herbivores it is approximately 30. The large intestine in flesh-eating animals is remarkable for its shortness and is generally considered as being from half as long to the same length as the trunk. The reason for the extreme shortness is easy to understand when it is remembered that flesh so quickly putrefies. If nature has made such careful allowance for this in the case of flesh-eating animals, we need hardly speculate as to the effect of cooked flesh (which is still more highly putrefactive) on the human organism with its comparatively long colon.

"The comparative shortness of the small intestine of the horse, rabbit and of other animals is compensated for by the enormous cecum, which in the horse has a capacity of about twice that of the stomach, and in the rabbit of about ten times that of the animal's stomach. In some of the inhabitants of the sea, such as seals and whales, the intestines are comparatively long, narrow and smooth, for the reason that their natural food is bulky, consisting of the whole bodies of fish, including scales and skeletons.

"Dr. Lonnberg has shown by dissections on nearly fifty varieties of reptiles that, in the insectivorous members, the length of the small intestine is 90 per cent of the length of the trunk and the length of the large intestine is 100 per cent, and the large intestine, 90 per cent of the length of the trunk. The fact borne out by his observations is that the vegetable-feeders have an intestine more than once again as long as animals feeding upon insects.

"This is strikingly shown in the frogs, where the tadpole (larva) has a very long intestine, correlated with the vegetable food, while the adult flesh-eating frog has a canal hardly longer than that of the tadpole of half the size."

"Dr. Corson-White in an article entitled 'The Relation of Diet to Digease,' published in Dr. Fox's book, makes some very interesting observations. Quoting him: 'Food derived from animal sources is high in protein, readily digested, and highly putrefactive. This type of diet is suited to an alimentary tract which permits rapid passage through its length. The stomach is small and the intestines short and narrow. This type of alimentary canal is found in all land carnivora. The herbivora, with food derived from plants requiring a longer period of time for its digestion, have, on the other hand, voluminous stomachs or large ceca or both, and a very long small intestine. The bacterial flora harbored in the intestinal tract of animals is closely related to the type of food and to the character of the alimentary tract. Flesh-eating annuals develop Gram-negative bacilli (Bacillus coli,) while the carbohydrate-eaters show a predominance of Gram-positive types. Animal protein develops more active proteolytic (protein-decomposing) bacteria than vegetable protein.

"In this connection the words of the illustrous John Hunter assume a new significance, viz.: 'The faeces of animals which live entirely on animal food in general very soon become putrid, and indeed, often before they are voided; but such animals are either without cecum or colon, or if not, what they have is very short, so that the excrement, not being long retained, has less time to become putrid.'

"On the basis of his findings in more than five thousand autopsies on animals, at the Philadelphia Zoo, Dr. Fox mentions that the acute gastroenteritis is more than twice as frequent in carnivorous animals as in herbivorous animals. Chronic nephritis was more frequent to the extent of 50 per cent in the flesh-feeders. Thyroid disease was about ten times as common in the carnivorous species as in the vegetable feeders. On the other hand, tuberculosis was found twice as often in the vegetable as in the flesh-eaters.

"We are often reminded that if meat-eating is bad practice for human beings, we should be surprised to see a healthy race of Eskimos. In making such comparisons at least some of the many factors entering into

Proper Care of the Feet

"Walking's a joy these crisp fall mornings, isn't it, Marie?"

"I love it, Lela, but my feet grow weary after the first half mile and I begin to think of them more than I do of the sparkling morning—You never get tired, do you?"

"Not any more, my child. I spent many years proudly refusing to admit that anything was wrong with my feet and forcing myself to stand on aching bones and flesh—when along came a teacher at college who put me on the right path."

"Tell me about her."

"Well, Miss Ramsey was the most radiant creature I had ever seen, and the most beautiful walker. I used to watch her and envy her—and then I told her that I'd give the world to walk and stand as gracefully and easily and tirelessly as she. And what do you suppose she answered?—'Wear Princess Pat shoes, my dear'."

"What Miss Ramsey did for you, Lela, you must do for me."

"All right. I can even do more, for since Miss Ramsey helped me buy my first Princess Pats, they have added a new feature more wonderful still—the built-in Main Spring Arch which supports the foot and absorbs all the shock of walking on hard pavements. I never before knew the sensation of 'walking on air,' but I do now! Meet me at Walk-Over's tomorrow morning, Lela continued, and we'll get stunning brown Princess Pats to match this costume and black satin ones for dressy wear—pretty soon your feet will be as good as mine!"

VISION
Thousands Discard Their Glasses!

Perfect Vision! The joy of seeing clearly and distinctly WITHOUT GLASSES! Eyestrain gone. Headaches gone. Vigor and enthusiasm instead of the despair of ill-health!

Hundreds of people are walking gladly in the light, freed from the bondage of glasses by Dr. Wesley M. Barrett and his eye researches, without the use of the knife or drugs!

Dr. Barrett Succeeds

Out of every 100 people today, 93 could profit by the Barrett Method. They are suffering from nearsightedness, farsightedness, astigmatism, muscle imbalance, old-age eyes and undeveloped eyes.

Millions of dollars are being spent to tell them that they need glasses. But DO they? That is the vital problem of today, and it is being answered amazingly by Dr. Barrett.

Lecture Free, Nov. 5th

Dr. Wesley M. Barrett will lecture on this subject Thursday night, 8 p.m., at Symphony Hall, 232 S. Hill St., Los Angeles.

If you cannot attend the lecture, write for the free booklet, or call at

SNATCHED FROM OPERATING TABLE, RECOVERS PERFECT HEALTH

Once more the Health Center wins a victory over surgery. Once again the famous Marathon Bio-Bloodwash Baths save a human from the operating knife.

Mrs. K (name on request) was helped into the Health Center suffering with a large abscess. She could not stand or walk. She was in continuous pain. Only a half hour before she was brought to the Health Center, doctors told her unless she was operated on within three hours she would die.

Her sister, who had heard of the marvelous cures brought about by the Marathon Bloodwash Baths, insisted that she be taken to the Health Center for treatment.

After three treatments, the abscess broke and drained and Mrs. K. was able to walk immediately without pain! Incidentally, she lost 27 pounds of excess weight and is now enjoying perfect health.

The Health Center is producing results like this almost every day, proving the truth of Bernarr McFadden's statement that "it is the greatest discovery for the health of the human race in the world today."

If interested, write to the Health Center, 1000 W. 7th St., for McFadden's booklet (sent free) or call for free consultation.

Exercises Do Wonders

Under direction of Prof. Paul C. Bragg, with Mr. Lee Davidson at the piano, men's classes meet Mondays at the Health Center from 7:30 to 8:30 p.m., and women's classes at the same hour on Thursdays. These exercises are especially designed to strengthen the vital organs.

Inner-Clean Removes Many Health Dangers

That constipation and indigestion are freuently the first symptoms warning serious disease of the stomach, liver, kidneys and heart, was the observation of Prof. Arnold Ehret, originator of the "Mucusless Diet Healing System."

Fermentation and putrefaction germinate poisons that derange the entire bodily mechanism. The prime requisite for the proper functioning of the physical system, vigorous health, youth and efficiency is the complete cleanliness of the intestinal tract.

INNER-CLEAN, the aromatic herb-vegetable compound perfected by Prof. Arnold Ehret, removes the long accumulated toxemias, mucus and undigested fermenting wastes and filth from the intestines that menace health and life.

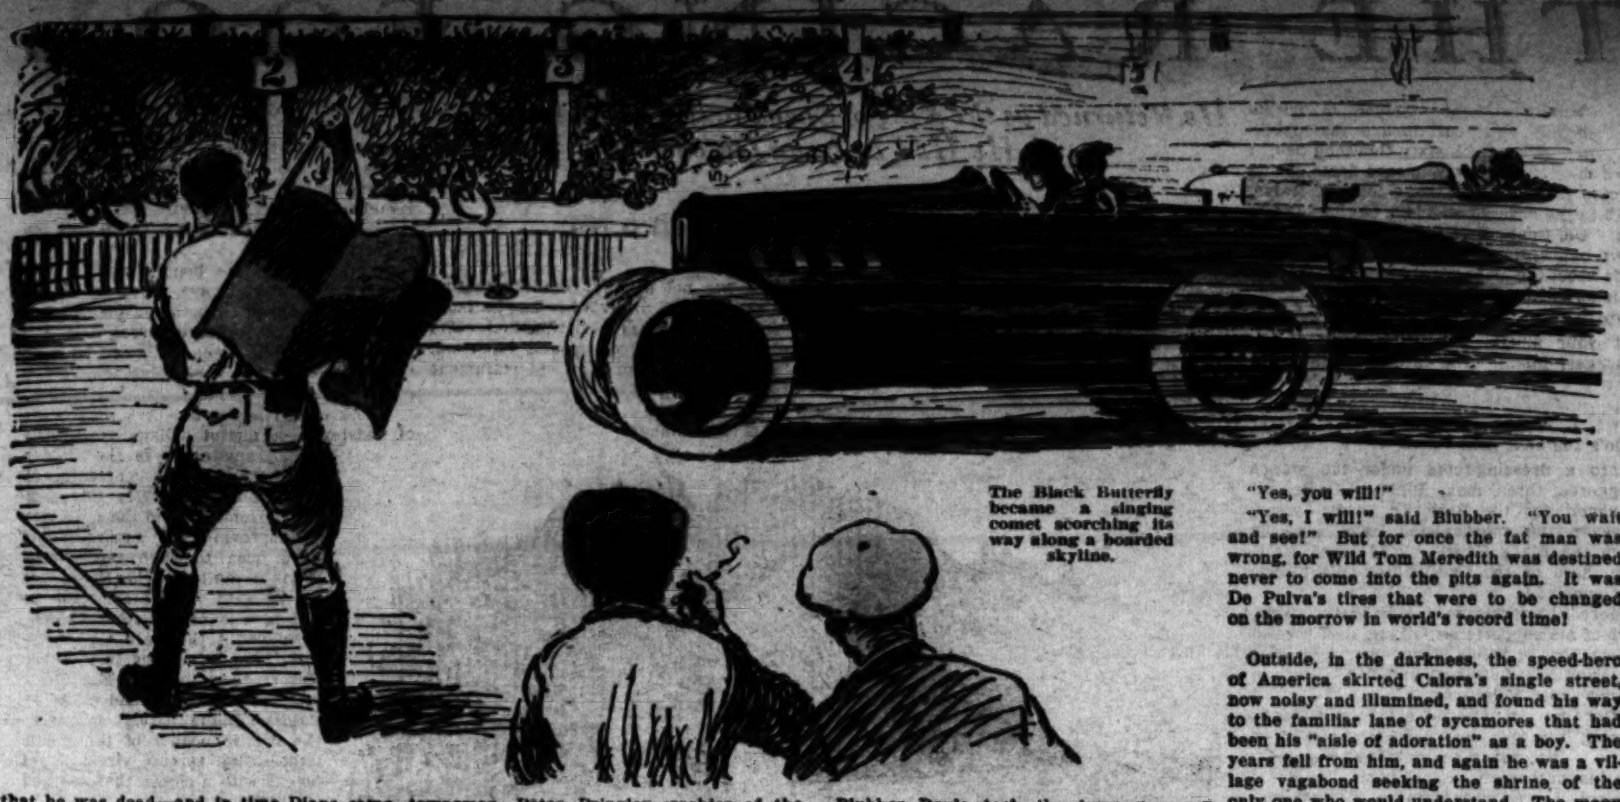
THE RACING FOOL

He Returned as the King of Speed to the Town in Which He Had Been an Outcast



The Black Butterfly became a singing comet scorching its way along a boarded skyline.

that he was dead—and in time Diana came to accept this as the explanation of why he had not written. Here had been a dream romance, as fragile and mysterious as the moonlight. She preferred to think of him as dead, rather than faithless.

He might well have died, but for the prank of Fate that snatched him from the darkness. The famous "desert classic" was being run in those days—the Los Angeles to Phoenix road-race—a nineteen-hour duel against time and the obstacles of nature. Halfway on the route was the tiny desert town in which Tom Meredith was stranded. He was among the station loiterers when Jacques Fournoy, the Flying Frenchman, came flashing up at dusk in the Golden Submarine, one side of the car crushed flat, and his mechanic unconscious from the pain of a broken arm. The officials had made no provision for substitute mechanics, and they said so. But the great Frenchman's blood was up. "What I care for mechanic!" he roared. "Give me some fool to pump oil and look back, and I get out of here!"

Destiny took young Meredith by the shoulder and shoved him forward. He said nothing, but climbed in beside the Frenchman, who pounded him on the back, and shouted: "Bien! Now we win or we die, and I don' care which! Allons!"

They departed in a cloud of dust, just as the nearest pursuer rolled in behind them. What a ride! Moon and stars and the rush of the night-wind on the desert! An exhilaration of soul under speed such as the dreaming vagabond of Calora had never conceived. Covered with dust and oil and glory, they rolled into Phoenix to find the gathered thousands awaiting them, and the checkered flag displayed in their honor.

"What I tell you?" said Fournoy. "The race—she is ours! Now, my young frien', we have time to get acquaint'! By gar, you bring me luck!"

Looking into the eyes of the gallant Frenchman, and grasping the hand that was extended, young Meredith dedicated himself at that moment to Hermes, God of Speed.

He rode with Fournoy, absorbing all the daring Frenchman's methods, until the day came when they overturned during the Grand Prix in France, and Fournoy, hopelessly crushed under the driving-wheel, whispered to him: "Adieu, mon brave! Play ze game, and I hope you be luckier zan I!"

Not long afterward Meredith returned to America, established connections with the famous Butterfly team, and eventually drove his first winning race. Not until then did he break the long silence that had marked the passing years. In a delicious moment of self-justification he scissored all the clippings and mailed them to Diana, the one person in all the world who he felt would understand.

Back came a letter full of the praise for which he hungered. He fancied that certain lines were tear-stained, and he wondered why—wondering until he read the clipping she had inclosed, a faded item from the Calora Sun that described the marriage of Diana Davis and "our esteemed fellow-townsman, Peter Pringley, cashier of the Calora Bank."

So her father had had his way after all! Tom Meredith could picture the tragedy as clearly as though he had been an eyewitness. Diana immolating herself on the altar of filial obedience.

It was shortly thereafter that Wild Tom Meredith rose to fame as the Black Ghost of the speedways. And the winning of the Knickerbocker Cup Race had placed almost within his grasp the Triple-A, crown-symbol of sovereignty on the speedways of America. He needed but one more victory to establish him as the king!

Now you begin to understand what the moonlight meant to Meredith, and what was in the heart of Diana, three thousand miles away, when she inspired the little town of Calora to awaken from its Rip Van Winkle slumber, convert the old racetrack into a motordrome, and summon back for public homage the man she had bade, as a boy, go forth alone.

Wally King took all the credit for the idea, but it was Diana who brought the promoter into town, and told him the history of Calora, and pointed out that it was only thirty miles removed from a population of a million souls.

Five nights later, at the wildest town meeting since Trustee Daniels broke the water-pitcher over the town marshal's head, the Calora Speedway Association was formed. But the final resolution was not achieved until they had taken old Jud Higginbotham, the town skinflint and pessimist, and chucked him into the middle of the street with a whoop and hurrah! There he stayed, baying at them from the darkness:

"Durn fools, you're all drunk! That's what y'are—drunk! Mark my words, we'll be busted higher'n a kite! Set this town back forty years!"

"Well, we ain't gone ahead in forty years," said Trustee Smith. "So what's the difference, you old bullfrog?"

It remained for Diana to heal old Jud's bitterness and reconcile all factions under the slogan: "Watch Calora Grow!"

Of these new angles to a home-town drama Wild Tom Meredith had not yet learned. Not until they reached San Francisco did Meredith learn that the opening date at Tanforan had been abandoned, and that he was now scheduled to appear in the little town that had once scorned him as the son of "Dan the drunkard."

A tremendous feeling of revulsion swept over the King of Speed. This wretched little town that had wronged him so bitterly in his youth, this hamlet of moonlight and mixed memories and the unhonored grave of his father, had no right now to summon him back and coin money out of his weary flesh and blood. Not for this had he sought a place in the sun!

"Cancel my entry," he told Langfield. "I won't drive at Calora."

The team manager turned purple. "Wha' d'ye mean, you won't drive? You've got to! I demanded five thousand as appearance money, and I got it!"

Blubber Doyle took the team manager aside and showed him a pocket calendar marked with red ink. "It's the moon," said Blubber. "The old full moon is doin' its stuff, and he ain't responsible. Don't try to argue with him now. Leave him to me; I know how to handle him. Don't worry. He'll be all right in a day or two."

The other drivers took up their quarters in Calora at once. But Meredith held out until the last moment, and then it was only the entreaties of the fat philosopher of the pits that induced the Black Ghost to reconsider his decision.

"I don't know what's in your mind," said Blubber, "and maybe it ain't none of my business; but you've always shot square with the public, Tom, and I hate to see you make a mistake now. Cheever and me were up in Calora yesterday.

"With the new track, the purses, the lap-prizes and the appearance dough, they're overboard two hundred thousand bucks, and where they ever got it, I don't know. Must be sportin' blood in the town somewhere. Nobody's squawkin'. They've got their money posted, and they're just waitin' for the Pride of Calora to show up, so they can tear the town up by the roots and hand it over. What say, Tom? Shall I phone 'em that we're on our way?"

So the Black Ghost answered the call of Calora, and never had he felt more like a disembodied spirit—some helpless shadow from the afterworld dragged back unwillingly to the haunts of childhood, and seeing and comprehending things to which all others were blind. Calora had changed so little, and so much had happened to him!

The program of entertainment differed but slightly from that to which he was accustomed—the same routine of receptions, street parades, interviews and photographs, the same "official banquet," during the course of which he sat toying with his food and listening dully to the same old empty compliments, bombastic speeches. He found courage to ask a question of the man at his left.

"What's that?" said the other. "Peter Pringley? Oh, Peter's dead. Must be all of six years now. Widow's had rather a hard time, what with the little boy and nursing her father. Old Doctor's gettin' pretty feeble. Reckon that's why she ain't here tonight. Did you know Diana?"

The wild man of the speedways nodded quietly. A moment later he arose, whispered his apologies to the toastmaster, and quietly left the banquet-room. Blubber Doyle whispered to Cheever: "The old boy's going to hit the hay early. He's sure got his work cut out for him tomorrow. Chet Gibson and the Swede—"

"I know," whispered Cheever. "I heard all about it. They're going to try and run his wheels off. But the man we've got to watch is De Pulva. The Wop is going out for it; and take it from me—that bird can drive when the money's up. This race is going to win in the pits."

"Well," said Blubber, "all you have to do is loop your arms and come in. I'll change all four wheels in twenty seconds."

"Yes, you will!"

"Yes, I will!" said Blubber. "You wait and see!" But for once the fat man was wrong, for Wild Tom Meredith was destined never to come into the pits again. It was De Pulva's tires that were to be changed on the morrow in world's record time!

Outside, in the darkness, the speed-hero of America skirted Calora's single street, now noisy and illumined, and found his way to the familiar lane of sycamores that had been his "aisle of adoration" as a boy. The years fell from him, and again he was a village vagabond seeking the shrine of the only one who would understand. The moon was in its last quarter. Nothing much had changed; the same moon, the same shrill call of crickets, and all the music of nature in the night. And there was Diana, the same Diana, waiting for him at the depot from which she had waved good-by long years ago.

"Tom, dear!"

"Diana!"

What a story they had to tell, there in the moonlight—this man who had won his spot in the fierce sunlight of the world and been shriveled by it, and this girl who had spent her years in the little town where nothing ever happened!

Small wonder that there seemed to be a wall between them against which Meredith's dream beat its wings in vain. When the narrative was over, he pleaded impetuously, with all the suppressed longing pent up by passing years; and Diana, white and wistful and troubled, was afraid of such happiness—afraid because their positions were now transposed. He was no longer the persecuted son of the village drunkard, but a public idol—the speed prince of America about to be crowned the king!

And how was she to know the mysteries of publicity, the inventive power of the press-agent? How was she to reconcile the gilded hero of a hundred fictitious tales with the man for whom her heart had always yearned? She answered him as she had answered once before:

"It isn't that I don't love you, Tom. I've followed your career from the time you sent me the first clipping. I've dreamed of the time when Calora would call you back, so that I could witness your triumph, and I've also dreamed of this moment, of you and me in the moonlight again. That's the trouble, Tom: I'm afraid you're dreaming now as well as I. It's the night and memories that are talking now. Your place is in the sun, and mine is in the moonlight, and the two don't shine together . . . Good-by, Tom—and God's luck tomorrow!"

He treasured her hand a moment, dropped it, and turned away, murmuring: "God's luck! . . . God's luck! What for?"

Imagine the crowded stands fronting a great wooden saucer around which steel dragon-flies guided by hooded humans were due to sing their way a hundred and twenty times, flashing past so swiftly that only the trained eye could check the numbers.

Dick Wagner, czar of the speedways, was lining them up in rows, with the pace-setter in front on the pole; and finally came the pistol-shot that set the torpedo fleet in motion!

Four times they circled the track, maneuvering into position, while the pace grew faster and faster. The next time around, the gaps began to close. Those in Group Two stepped on it and moved up toward the leaders. They swung into the turn and came down the stretch, eighteen cars in a thundering mass of straining steel. Down went the red flag, and the race was on!

CARE OF THE BODY

Common Colds

By PHILIP M. LOVELL, N.D.

(The following is a radio talk given by Dr. Philip M. Lovell over KHJ.)

AS THE cooler weather begins to approach many of us become aware that we are not up to par in health. Nature lets us know in various fashions that we must take heed and correct the defects of our body.

Although warnings are in various forms, yet by far the commonest is the ordinary cold, technically known as rhinitis, or inflammation of the nasal passages.

Scarcely an individual but knows what it is to have "that stuffed-up sensation, mucous discharge, difficult breathing and run-down feeling." Of more interest are the methods by which colds are acquired and the task of overcoming them after they once take hold.

The sedentary work which many people are compelled to do, the close confinement indoors, together with overeating and a poor selection of food, undoubtedly play a leading part in rendering the individual susceptible to cold. If we led a more active outdoor life, took more exercise to burn the waste material and governed our diets by sound common-sense principles, we would have considerably less autumnal cold attacks.

The statement that we "catch" a cold from infection produced by contact with another person does not hold true in the light of science or common sense. Germs cannot develop except in a susceptible environment. The production of this susceptible environment is by the decrease in resistance of the individual's vital powers. First must come the susceptibility, the decreased resistance, the fertile environment for bacterial invasion—then comes the cold.

The means of production of this environment is much more pertinent to the question of colds than is our knowledge of bacteria or germs. If we but understood the methods of prevention, cure would be of considerably less importance. Consequently, by our knowledge of causes we may readily deduce methods of cure.

A lack of sufficient clear fresh air is one of the main factors responsible for our lack of resistance against colds. People stay indoors too much. The air of a room is breathed again and again. Very soon the oxygen becomes polluted with an excessive quantity of carbon dioxide.

Many people sleep in rooms either with insufficient windows or sometimes with windows tightly closed. Living in Southern California especially, there is neither justification nor sense in sleeping in rooms having poor ventilation. Fresh air is, perhaps, the finest antidote against colds.

Together with the necessity for fresh air, the individual must know how to take the precious oxygen into his system. If he remains cooped up in an office or shop or mill, for eight or nine hours a day, at least he should not permit the stress of his occupation to change the posture of his body. He should, at all times, while at work or at home, know that his lungs are for a definite purpose—to be used fully and quite vigorously.

When one studies the average posture of the average individual, it is indeed surprising that we haven't many more cases of respiratory diseases, even though at present the respiratory diseases have a larger mortality than any other group. A casual study of almost any individual reveals that we are exceedingly slovenly in our carriage and posture. Most of the time we use no more than a fourth or a fifth of our natural lung capacity.

The result is that the blood is insufficiently charged with oxygen and considerable waste material remains unburned. In every cold there is an extensive elimination of morbid wastes. If more of these wastes should be burnt through natural deep, rhythmic breathing, we would have considerably less mortality from lung diseases.

Stand straight. Walk straight. Sit up straight. Use your lung power. Train your children to do likewise and you will find this measure alone will be of tremendous help in overcoming and preventing the regular periodic seasonal cold.

There is more to this question than merely outdoor life and correct posture. The cold is an eliminative process. As such we must consider the eliminative organs in their entirety in order to assist the re-establishment of normal function.

Some of the characteristic symptoms associated with colds are the discharge of considerable portions of waste and effete material from the body. Generally we shall find the tongue coated with a foul furry substance. The breath is bad, as the lungs seek to discharge their quantity of waste. Sometimes fever is present with its quota of burnt poisons. Generally the kidney excreta are strong, pungent and laden with waste. In its effort to assist the general process we often find excessive looseness of the bowel discharges.

In every way nature is seeking to discharge accumulated morbid wastes. Every avenue of elimination is functioning to full capacity. Knowing this, the sensible behavior during the cold should be to assist the avenues of elimination as extensively as possible.

The question is, how can this be done? First and foremost, permit me to emphatically contradict a slogan which has erroneously crept into the minds of many people, namely: "Feed a cold and starve a fever." Nothing could be more scientifically untrue. A practice such as this is vicious, detrimental and inevitably bound to result in the complications that make a cold a much more dread disease than its mere symptoms of the time.

Both fevers and colds should be treated by the starvation process, semi-starvation, or at the best, by a light frugal diet. The total quantity of food consumed, irrespective of its kind, should be the minimum that one can get by with. Where the conditions are favorable, even a fast of several days will markedly assist the recuperative powers.

Further than this the digestive system should be thoroughly cleansed, preferably by means of the plain water enema instead of by the pernicious use of laxative drugs. Laxative medicines, even though they assist the process of intestinal elimination, by reason of their irritation and resultant inflammation to the digestive system, should never be used.

The enema should be resorted to daily and in some cases, even several times per day until the acute symptoms of the cold have subsided.

During the time when the symptoms are strongly manifest, one should drink considerable quantities of cool water.

Water has a beneficial tonic and cleansing effect upon the digestive system and should, under all conditions of cold, be used as a substitute for the heavier food drinks such as milk, coffee, chocolate, soups, etc.

During the acute cold more or less complete rest and quiet are essential for well being. Even though contagion and resultant infection take place only when the resistance is at a low ebb, it is nevertheless unfair and unsocial for the individual to mix with groups of people when he is in the acute stage of respiratory elimination.

The rules of common cleanliness such as the use of frequent clean handkerchiefs or small squares of muslin should be rigidly adhered to. Spitting in public places or in fact anywhere but in one's own handkerchief is disgraceful and bound ultimately to be injurious to others. The extreme measures of complete quarantine and isolation are usually not necessary in a common cold. On the other hand, the individual suffering from it has no moral justification in going to dances, parties or other social functions. Keep to yourself as much as you possibly can. The rest and quiet are just as essential a part of good nursing as is any other form of treatment.

Sometimes adjuncts of immediate treatment are necessary to relieve acute symptoms. Then, other measures of a drugless nature besides those I have mentioned may be of considerable value, at least in furnishing relief and in a lesser measure toward overcoming the actual condition.

When the chest feels thoroughly filled with mucus, and breathing is difficult and sometimes painful, hot-water packs placed completely around the chest front and back will assist considerably in loosening the adhering mucus and make breathing free and easy. These should be continued for twenty minutes to half an hour and repeated several times through the day until relief is secured.

Where the abdomen is tense and drawn, similar applications will serve toward securing relaxation as well.

At other times relief may be furnished by inducing profuse perspiration. This should be done, however, with considerable care, for if the patient becomes chilled the contraction might intensify the symptoms of the cold. About the best method of procedure to induce profuse sweating is by means of considerable quantities of bedclothes. After the patient has retired in the usual fashion, put on two or three times the normal quantity of blankets. Sometimes a hot-water bottle to the feet or to the abdomen will bring on perspiration more readily.

While in bed, if the patient is served with a glass of warm lemonade made of warm water, lemon juice and honey, the perspiration process will be more profuse and more easily achieved.

Where there are complications such as "that clogged chocked-up feeling of the head" and the closing of the nostrils due to mucus accumulations, other hydrotherapeutic measures present themselves. A fifteen or twenty-minute hot foot bath will serve to relieve the congestion at the head as it draws the blood to the extremities. If the hands are also placed in hot water, the relief of head and nasal congestion will take place much easier.

It is not necessary to use drugs of any type or kind when a cold occurs. Prevent colds by measures of common sense and sensible hygiene. When, however, they do occur, you will generally find that these simple measures are all that are necessary toward producing the desired results.

Bacillus Bulgaricus

IT IS the duty of the medical profession to inculcate the public with a smattering of knowledge concerning some of the deeper and more intricate aspects of modern medicine.

The strides of medical science have been largely in the realm of bacteriology. Bacterial forms have been more or less arbitrarily classified and grouped according to modern bacteriological data.

Among many of these germ-disease-combinations quite a long time ago Prof. Metchnikoff discovered that certain germs affected the intestinal tract. He and other bacteriologists classified these germs in various intestinal groups, bacillus coli communis, bacillus typhosus and several others. He found that when the corresponding diseases were present these germs were flourishing in the intestinal tract. Believing germs to be the cause of disease, the next effort, of course, was to find a method of killing the germs.

What could be more wonderful than to have germ kill germ? A sort of internecine warfare guided by the brains of man! Presto! All that was necessary to do was to find the enemy of the deadly bacillus coli and introdue one to the other. Good-by coli—hail to the victor, typhosus.

Laboratory experiment showed that certain germs found when milk soured were also cannibalistic in tendency. That is,

The Omen of a Broken Mirror

Another Entertaining Episode in the Married Life of Helen and Warren

By MABEL HERBERT URNER

Creator of the "Helen and Warren" Characters

"NO, let's take the drawers out first," cautioned Helen. "It's too heavy with them in."

"Here, get out of the way—I can move it all right," Warren dragged out one end of the heavy desk.

"No, no, those legs are so delicate! Take out the bottom drawer, anyway—that's the heaviest."

"Great guns, what you got in here?" struggling with the overcrowded drawer. "All this old junk! Don't you ever clear out?"

"Dear, it's that check-writer of yours that makes it so heavy."

"By George, forgot I had it," examining it with interest. "What's the idea of chuckin' it out of sight?"

"Why, you never use it—and it's so in the way."

"Can't use it buried down there! From now on it stays on this desk."

An unsightly check-writer on her antique Sheraton desk! But in a few days, with his masculine lack of observation, it could again be banished to the bottom drawer.

"A little further," as he moved out the now lightened desk. "Leave room for their ladder. That'll do. Now we'll have to take down this mirror."

"See here, why can't they do all this tomorrow?"

"Oh, I wouldn't trust them—these frail old things. Painters are so careless."

"Well, I can't get it down with that stepladder—not high enough."

"Get one of their ladders from the kitchen. I'll take these off," standing on a chair to remove the silk shades from the candlelabra wall lights.

"How you goin' to move that bookcase?" when he lumbered it with the ladder.

"That can't be moved. They'll have to paint around it. We'll cover it up."

"Blamed rickety ladder! How the Sam Hill can they work on this?"

"Dear, you steady it. I'll get up."

While he held the ladder, Helen slipped the wire off the brass hook.

"Now, where d'you want it put?" lowering the mirror to the floor.

"We'd better hang it in my dressing-room till they're through."

"And have to take it down again? Not much! Set it here against the wall."

"No, no, it might get broken. Well, put it in the hall closet, then."

"How's that?" stowing the mirror behind a suit case. "Safe there."

"No, turn the glass to the wall. Be careful, that old gilt chips off."

"That all you want?" impatient to get back to his evening paper.

"Wait, help me cover the bookcase. Just a minute, I'll get an old sheet."

A hasty search through the orderly linen shelves. All good sheets.

"That old one isn't here—she must've taken it for the ironing-board. I wish I had that old blanket I gave Mrs. O'Grady. You always say 'Give things away—don't get cluttered up.' And when I do, I always need them."

"Well, don't stand there chewin' the rag. Take any kind of a sheet."

"I hate to get them all stained with paint," selecting one reluctantly.

"Why in blazes don't you let the painters do this?" as he held the ladder while she covered the bookcase. "They bring a lot of drop cloths."

"But they don't half cover things. And when they do the ceilings—you know how they spatter. This isn't big enough—dear, get me another sheet."

"Hold tight, there," letting go the rickety ladder. "Don't try any stunts."

"Rot! Only bad luck's the trouble of gettin' it put in."

The bookcase finally shrouded, Warren, registering rebellion at any further work, settled down to read.

Condensing the papers and magazines in the bottom of the bookcase drawer, Helen made room for her antique treasures.

"Don't move that clock!" Warren glanced at the now almost bare mantel. "Stops every time you move it."

"Yes. I'll just cover it up then. Dear, help me close this drawer."

"Now let up on me!" again slumping down to read. "A rush day at the office—then have to shift all the scenery here."

"Dear, they won't get to the dining-room tomorrow—we can have dinner here. She expects to get it—and there's all that roast from tonight."

"Not even comin' home! You meet me at the office—we start from there."

"Oh, I'll be too tired to dress and go out."

"Do you good. If you stay here you'll just fuss around. I'll get tickets for 'The Blow-out'—hear that's a rippin' show."

During the periodic chaos of painting and housecleaning, she expected little consideration from Warren. His one idea was to escape.

Gently, she moved from the wall her precious Pembroke table.

Cover it up and leave it in the middle of the room? No, it was so frail—they'd be sure to knock against it.

"Dear, help me take this into the bedroom. They won't start in there tomorrow."

"Start in there?" he exploded. "Not goin' to do the bedroom?"

"Why, I thought you knew! Stop that," as Pussy Purr-Mew clawed the protecting newspapers from a chair. "They're to do that all over—paper and paint."

"The devil they are! Just had that room done."

"It's been two years. They didn't touch it last year. Around the window-sills it's perfectly awful. This cheap paint—no wonder it doesn't last. If we could only get that lovely enamel finish they have in London. Don't you remember in our Whitehall Court flat? Just like glass."

"Huh, that's the British—never get that finish over here. Takes two or three coats 'fore the enamel. Let go, I can carry it better alone."

"No, don't lift it that way—that piece is loose. I'll take one end."

"Where d'you want it?" as he backed into the bedroom.

"Right there. Now we'll have to be careful and not run into it."

"This ceiling's all right," scowling upwards. "Not goin' to have this done?"

"Why, look at that stain in the corner—where that bathtub ran over. They tried to fix it—but it always showed. You can never touch up kalsomine. Would you have this same shade or a little deeper cream? Oh, she's at those papers again!" rushing back to the library.

Pussy Purr-Mew shut in the kitchen, Helen resumed her perturbed getting-ready-for-the-painters.

"Dear, just one more thing," pleadingly, "then I won't bother you again."

"See here, what'd you do today? Why leave all this till night?"

"We didn't know until late this afternoon. They just brought their ladders and said they'd be here in the morning. We vacuumed the rugs and rolled them up—that's all we had time for before dinner. Dear, it won't take long."

"Huh, I remember those blamed curtain rods—put 'em up once. Rotten job!"

"But they're not hard to take down. I'll do it—you just hold the ladder."

For the next half hour, from the top of the painter's ladder, grumblingly held, Helen struggled with obdurate curtain fixtures.

"Now I must put these ends so I'll know where they are," gathering them up. "Dear, put those rods in the hall closet—tie them together first."

"What'll I tie 'em with?" his usual helplessness.

"Get the string box in the pantry. I'm putting these ends in this drawer."

"Never any decent string," struggling with the snarled mass. "Why don't you loosen up and buy a ball—get one for ten cents. Now, where d'you want these?"

"I just told you—in the hall closet. Oh, there's one you left out' Wait, I'll tie them," resigned to his bungling incapability.

Carefully Helen folded the fine net curtains. Not three weeks since they had been laundered. Now with everything fresh they would have to be done again.

A crash! An explosive oath.

"Oh, what have you done?" dashing to the hall closet where Warren was glaring profanely at the shattered mirror.

"That damned wire! Caught my foot in it. Frame's all right," dragging it out. "Nothing broke but the glass."

"A mirror!" wailed Helen. "Seven years' bad luck!"

"Rot! Only bad luck's the trouble of gettin' it put in."

"And that fine old glass!" picking up the pieces. "This modern glass isn't—"

"Told you not to take it down tonight. But you're so blamed headstrong—"

"I wanted to hang it in my room and you wouldn't! You'll never do anything about the house—and when you do, you don't half do it!"

"You got that dead right! I got enough to do at the office."

"But other men do—think what Mr. Stevens does! I'll have to get the dust pan. I wish you'd seen the extra shelves he put up in their pantry."

"If he likes to potter around the house—I don't! Hate it!'

"That's why I never can have any of the little conveniences—"

"Why can't you? Got a superintendent and a couple of house men. They'll do your odd jobs if you tip 'em enough. But you're too darn stingy. Now I'm through!" savagely. "I'll pay for anything you want done—but I'll not do it! My job's at the office! If you can't run this shack—we move to a hotel!"

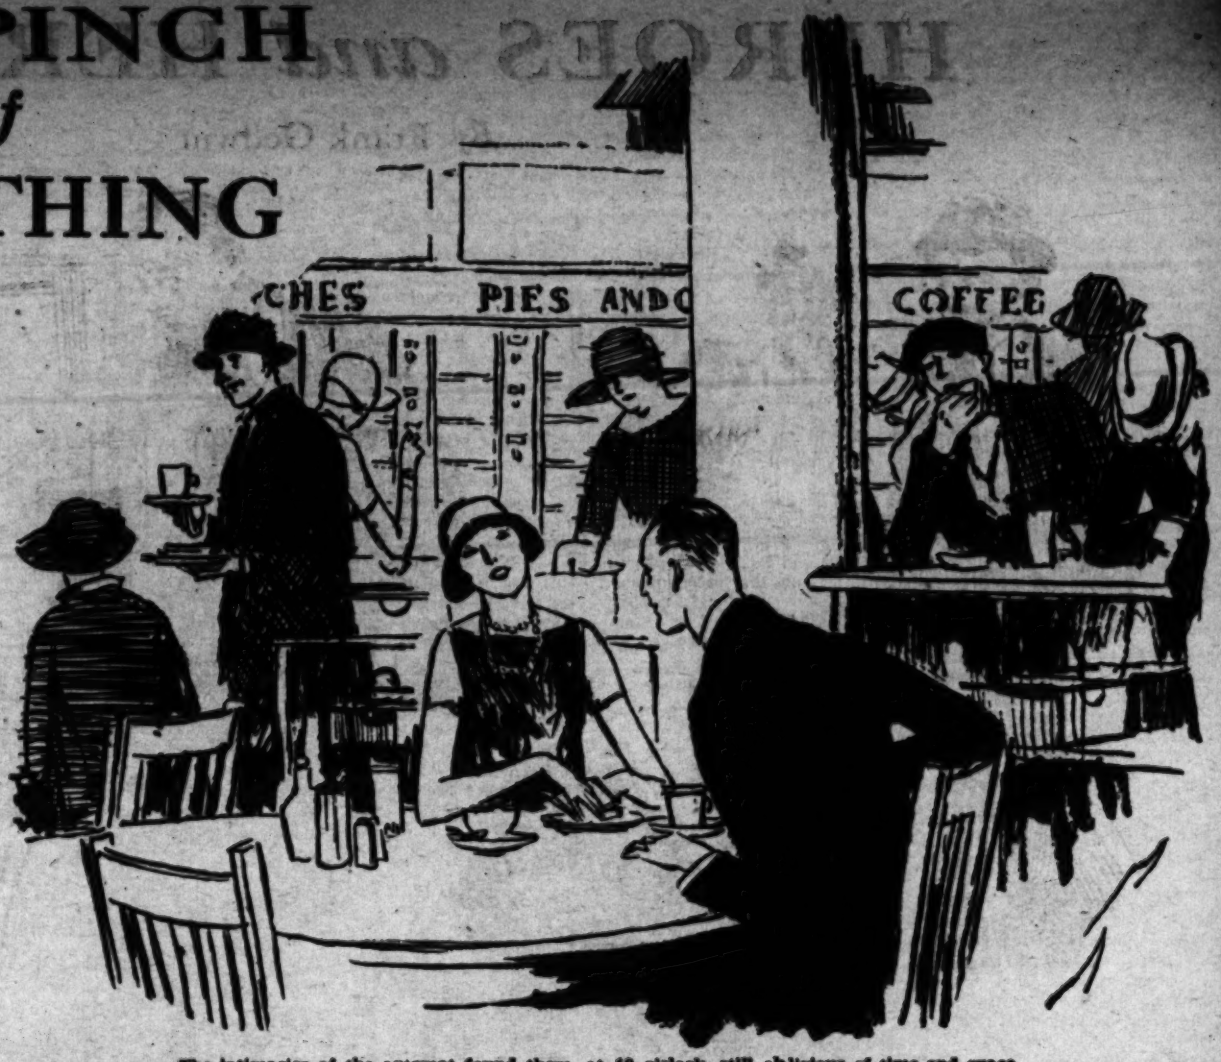
HEROES and HEROISM

By Frank Godwin

THE PINCH of SOMETHING

By Grace Torrey



The intimacies of the automat found them, at 10 o'clock, still oblivious of time and space.

AT HER high-school commencement Mabel sang "By the Land of the Laughing Water." As an encore she gave "The Rosary." Afterward Mrs. Howard Allison, wife of the president of the First National Bank, told her mother that she had heard a world-famous star sing "The Rosary," and that of the two she preferred Mabel.

"She said to tell you there was no comparison. I just thought I'd let you know."

They were in the pass pantry getting the creamed oysters ready for the seniors in the front room. Mrs. Innis kissed her daughter a little timidly. It was terrifying to think of herself as the mother of a world-famous star.

"These patties are ready," she said. "Hadn't we better dish up the oysters?"

Mabel was critically appraising the cream sauce.

"Not yet," she said. "They need a pinch of something."

It was funny that, with all her Art, she was unerring about such ordinary things as flavors. Mrs. Innis knew that she would get something off the shelf that would make the oysters taste better than even Mrs Howard Allison's high-priced cook could make them taste. Whatever it was, she wouldn't learn it out of any book. She sensed it.

"Don't you tell them I had anything to do with these oysters," warned Mabel.

"No," promised Mrs. Innis. "I won't."

She understood how her daughter felt. A girl with a future like hers didn't want to get herself known as a good cook.

Mabel sang for the seniors one last song before they became forever alumni. Her mother, looking around at the wistful admiration on their faces, knew that not even Isabel Allison, with all her father's money, was so pretty as Mabel. Yet even Isabel's face revealed no jealousy. The boys' faces were, of course, infatuated. Herbie Brooksmith, the best center rush the high school ever had, and Mabel's admitted favorite, did not look more adoring than did the other boys, as the strains of "The Rosary" died away for the third time that evening.

Herbie continued to be an excellent center rush, functioning thus at the State university for four years. Mabel went down to his senior ball. It was as they danced in the big college gymnasium, that she told him he might have more than a little hope.

"Only," she said, as they sat together in the Turkish corner, behind the fir boughs with which the decoration committee had sequestered it, "you must be very patient. There is my Art, you know."

Herbie was humble. But she could go right on taking lessons. His father's real-estate business was booming. He was to be taken into it. As his wife, she need not lose a day of Art.

Mabel's beautiful eyes saw, not Herbie entranced before her, but thousands of Herbies. There was a darkened auditorium, from whose hush the storm of approbation presently broke.

"My child," the great Figlione was saying, wiping tears from his eyes, "it is a triumph. You are established."

Slowly Mabel's eyes came back to the reality of Herbie.

"We must wait," she told him gently. "I must go away and study. I owe it to my Art."

Mrs. Innis, that other proud possessor, with whom Herbie now shared Mabel and her Art, died that summer. He dared, in the loneliness of the little white house where he had spent many happy hours, to urge himself upon her. Why could they not be married at once? Almost, he felt, she trembled into his arms.

Yet, at the very brink of yielding, she drew back. There was some money now. It was too dreadful to discuss it, in this sad hour. But her mother's life insurance had been paid. Mabel had received a good offer for the little white house. If she took it, she would have sixty-five hundred dollars. She could stop taking lessons of Professor Timmy, could go to new York, study six months with the great Figlione, and make the long-planned debut. Extraordinary questions came into Herbie's perplexed mind. Could Mabel really mean to sell the little white house? If she made this debut in New York, then what? Where, then—he could not spare her the bewildered question—would he come in?

"Why, Herbie!" Mabel's lovely eyes reproached his doubts. "Wouldn't it be wonderful to know that you had helped me toward what I've always dreamed of doing? Toward what meant so much to Mother?"

Three days later, as Mabel stood under the soaring dome of the great waiting-room of the Pennsylvania Station, she felt that she was at last upon a worthy threshold. The vast impersonal efficiency of this place, with its smart crowds, its uniformed officials, seemed a prophecy of her augmented future.

Then Margie fell upon her neck, with gaspings of friendly rapture.

"Mabel! If you aren't a sight for sore eyes! Pinky! This is Mabel!"

Pinky was a manly young woman who gave Mabel a strong handclasp and assumed her bag.

"We'll go over to Fifth and take a bus," said Margie. "It's such a nice way to begin. Oh, Mabel! You're going to love it."

"It's wonderful!" she said and gave Margie her beautiful smile. Margie was just a girl of no distinguished talent, who was graduated from high school two years earlier than Mabel. She had taken a business course and had gone to New York two or three years ago. She was private secretary to someone in Wall Street. She was in with all the theatrical crowd. At least rumor suggested the outlines of these facts. Mabel had written to her for advice about her own impending entry, and had received an air-mail letter, offering her the freedom of Margie's apartment, the entree to her theatrical group and the inside track to Fame.

The evening's program, as Margie outlined it, between squeezes of Mabel's hand, as they sat together on top of the bus, was exciting. They would go to Margie's apartment. She and Pinky shared it, but there was room for a third. They had, in fact, been casting about for the right third and Mabel was heaven-sent.

After viewing the apartment and freshening themselves a little, the plan was to have dinner at Carrie's Cellar, and then seats for "The Whirlpool." The Corrupt Press would furnish the tickets.

As they sprang from the bus, Pinky and Margie told her that they had reached the village, and pointed out the landmarks. Halfway along the block, they plunged down four steps, into what had been the old Cavannaugh mansion.

"Historic as the deuce," said Pinky. "We've got the drawing-room."

It was a beautiful room into which they ushered her. Mabel, seeing the glitter of the mantelpiece crystals, the graciousness of the old carved mantel, the nice proportioning of height with width and length, the darkness of the old oak floor, contrasted with the paneling of doors and window framing, knew that the handiwork of artists had gone to its fashioning.

As she struggled into the black dress that she called her costume de theatre, Margie pointed out the three new couch covers, the gorgeous pillows and the yellow paint on the kitchen chairs, all making a sunny drawing-room in Mabel's honor. A kitchen table, that had received one can of black paint, not merely strengthened up the color scheme, but symbolized a library.

"Show her the combination butler's pantry and bathroom," she urged, "and the three-burner gas plate behind the curtain. And tell her to make herself at home."

While Mabel made herself at home the girls described the crowd that would dine at Carrie's Cellar. There might be someone from the cast of "The Whirlpool." And people in the writing game, or the musical game, or the producing game, dropped in. The Corrupt Press, who was in the newspaper game, knew them all.

"You're going to love the Corrupt Press," Margie said.

The Corrupt Press did not, in the manner of Herbie, call for them. He had not reached Carrie's Cellar, in fact, when they invaded its dimness. Margie had time to draw her attention to the frieze of headless blue horses and orange serpents ornamenting the walls and to let her know that they, as well as the pink and lemon-colored lanterns faintly lighting their repast, had been designed by the great Vashka himself.

"Over at that table," she whispered, "is Celia May, the dancer in 'Moonbeams.' Here come the Prince!"

With the Prince came Rose Stanley, his wife. The Prince, for everyday purposes, was Isidore Sochoff, born right in the village, but making a name for himself as a player of royalty in the new European plays appearing on this side. Rose Stanley was a pianist, in town between tours.

Mabel heard Margie say, "You want to keep your eye on Mabel. She's our next stellar luminary."

Rose Stanley turned her haggard stare on Mabel's face. Under the prolonged scrutiny of her melancholy eyes, Mabel knew the first uncertainty of her life as to her own significance in the scheme of the universe. "You are artiste?" Miss Stanley at length inquired.

"I hope so," said Mabel. A moment earlier she would have confidently answered yes.

"What is your metier?" Miss Stanley lit her second cigarette and blew its smoke reflectively in Mabel's face.

"I sing," coughed Mabel.

"Oh!" Miss Stanley created further smoke screens. You shall sing for me," she commanded, rather than said. Then the Corrupt Press arrived, and all interest centered on him.

Nothing, Mabel instantly decided, could be more Herbie's opposite than the Corrupt Press. Herbie, a magnificent viking, with blond hair and massive shoulders, would have made two of him.

"His real name is Lorillard Morgan," Margie explained. "His ancestors planted Plymouth Rock and wrote the Constitution of the United States. He has a B. A. degree or something terrible like that. But he works for the New York Press and we call him the Corrupt Press. Cute, isn't he?"

"I am a sheep in wolf's clothing, Miss Innis," said the Corrupt Press. "Those who know and love me call me Lambie."

Herbie, Mabel thought, would have died rather than say such a thing. Yet the young man had nice eyes. She liked his hair even though it was dark. New York men too, she decided, had a way of dressing that could give even Herbie hints. And Herbie was a wonderful dresser.

"Lambie dear," said Rose Stanley, "have you some good news for me?"

Lorillard Morgan shifted over so slightly, so that the white arm seemed to be resting rather on the back of his chair than on his shoulder, as he handed her from an inner

...ceed in October. Back of Lorillard Morgan's silence, however, she was sure there lay not only knowledge, but the friendliest good will.

She saw him slip into a seat at the rear of Lorelei Hall just as she began the first note of "Caro mio bene," which opened her program. It was not hard to see him. He was one of perhaps a hundred and fifty listeners, sprinkled among the thousand seats of the hall. Herbie was there, handsome and conspicuously ruddy among the city faces. Beside him was Isabel Allison, slim and smart in her new New York outfit. Margie was there, and Pinky, their friends, Pietro's pupils, and the critics, languidly leafing over her program.

After the second song of her Italian group, Majors of the Union-News drooped outward, looking at his watch. She had seen him make a note on his program. After the French group, Hartwell of the Clarion and Smith of the Review went out together. Before the aria, Wayland of the Record slipped into a seat beside Lorillard Morgan. And she saw the critic of the Press standing beside the rear exit.

The next morning Mabel let Margie and Pinky get away, keeping her head under the bedclothes, to establish the impression that she was still asleep. When they had gone she got feverishly into her street clothes and went out to buy all the papers.

Her face did not change its expression as she read them. In the Clarion she found that Mabel Innis, a Western singer of pleasing personality, had given an ambitious program yesterday afternoon. Smith of the Review gave her a line to the effect that Miss Innis gave promise of becoming a pleasant exponent of lyrics. Wayland of the Record said she had personal charm, but had not as yet perfected the bel canto. Majors gave her a scathing dismissal. She lacked beauty of voice, and should not have challenged criticism by the familiar difficulties of the aria upon her program. She had been off key at least once, and in its upper register her voice was forced. She turned to the Press. There Lorillard Morgan's friend had recorded that a friendly audience had warmly applauded Miss Innis' program. He thought English ballads were her especial metier, and granted the wisdom which selected as her first encore "By the Land of the Laughing Water," and as her second the overworked and sentimental "Rosary." Much as he deplored the appearance of these numbers on any program, he recognized her especial gift in the rendering of intimate lyrics, and encouraged her to pursue this obvious line.

The telephone shrilled. That would be Herbie. She had Herbie, healthy and ardent, Herbie, and the eight-room house, with three baths. The telephone shrilled again.

"No!" she said to it. "Not that."

The third time it spoke she reached for the receiver.

"What is it?" she whispered.

"It's a gorgeous morning," said Lorillard Morgan.

"Is it?" she found somewhere a voice that was not her own.

"I've just got another play back," he went on. "Do you feel like celebrating with me?"

Mabel, who a moment before had seen her own dead face at the bottom of a deep green pool, with seaweed floating back and forth over it, suddenly laughed.

"Aren't you a darling?" she said to the telephone.

"Will you confirm that?" The telephone, in replying, did not speak in a tone either of mockery or lightness.

"Yes," said Mabel.

The intimacies of an automat found them, at ten o'clock, still oblivious of time and space. As nearly as Mabel could remember, there had been coffee and rolls. Mainly there had been her confirming of her telephonic statement and Lorillard Morgan's admission that his eyes had never been enigmatic.

"But what had I to give you?" he asked. "I'm just a failure."

"You've promised to give me the truth about my singing," she said.

"It is the singing of the most beautiful and beloved of persons in the whole world," he answered. "And that is the truth."

"No," she smiled, ridiculously happy. "You must tell it all."

All about them the down-and-outs were breakfasting, the thin clerks, the stenographers, the errand girls, the homeless apartment dwellers, the defeated, the invisible people who do the hard work of the world. Lorillard Morgan, whose play had just come

...ack, and Mabel Innis, whose friends had applauded her yesterday at Lorelei Hall, smiled at each other, in the solitude of their complete understanding.

"I've hoped I was wrong," he told her, "that you mightn't have to be disappointed. And I've been glad you had money. You can go on trying. Life is whatever you make of it."

She shook her head at him.

"No," she said. And she told him about the twenty-seven hundred dollars. "It's all over. But I've a wonderful idea."

"Don't say that it's over," he begged. "Figlione's back. He'll listen to you."

"Figlione!" She covered her eyes with her hand. "I never want to hear his name."

As they walked back to Margie's apartment she sketched her idea. She would open a dining-room. It should not be a grotto, nor a cellar. It should be clean and quiet. There should be a fireplace and polished brass. She would serve only as many people as the place would hold. There should be no pushing. There should be much white paint. She had her mother's linen and old silver and a houseful of quaint old black walnut. There should be enough light. There should be nothing canned. Things should be flavored. A dinner that would nourish two should not swallow the greater fraction of a ten-dollar bill. She had always known she could cook. She had always been ashamed of it until today.

"I shall call it," she told him, "The Little White House."

They were at the door of Margie's apartment. In the foyer there was Herbie. She looked from him to Lorillard Morgan.

"Oh!" she truthfully told him. "I'm so sorry, Herbie! I forgot."

Afterward, as she looked at his outraged back, going through the door, she knew that Isabel could give him what she had never had to give. Never, she was thinking, had she looked at Herbie as Isabel had looked at him, only yesterday. She wondered as she saw him shouldering his way rapidly across the street, whether she would ever see him again. Were he and the great Figlione alike part of the buried dream?

The Little White House took its immensely successful stride from the beginning. In six months it had a reputation, and she had almost her sixty-five hundred dollars in the bank. She had added a second white room, and only those who telephoned a day ahead saw the inside of the Little White House. She kept always a place for Margie and Pinky, and many a lean genius fattened his legs under her old walnut. She gave Herbie and Isabel Allison a special dinner there, when they came honeymooning to New York. As she looked into Herbie's ruddy countenance, and saw the radiance of Isabel, she knew that Herbie had at least forgiven if not forgotten her.

And the next night she saw the great Figlione. She saw at first merely a little man who came in late with Lorillard Morgan, fat and panting, with puffy circles under his eyes. She did not know him, but she knew from the stir among the other late diners that this some one of importance.

As always, when she saw Lorillard Morgan's face, she searched it for the great news that she had told him it would some day have to tell. Tonight, as she looked at him, she read its uncommon message. He and the fat little man had dined luxuriously for an hour before she had a moment's leisure. Then she heard the voice at her elbow that always made her pulses race.

"Are you free for a moment?" it asked. She turned.

"They've taken your play!" she charged.

"Yes," he admitted. "I've something to offer you now besides homage. And I've a favor to ask." She looked at him.

"Anything," she said.

"Would you mind very much meeting Figlione? He's very anxious."

"Why, of course!" she said. And Lorillard Morgan went to fetch him. The fat little man stood before her, panting and bowing. Never, she heard him say, had he, in his many sojourns in America, dined as he had dined tonight in the Little White House. It had been, he said, no mere dining. Rather, a rite, a sacrament.

"The casserole," he told her, "was worthy of the Rue Lafayette. It had that which cannot be taught, the soupcon— how you say it, the—pinch of something." The gesture his eloquent hands made in the air was of delicate measurements between thumb and finger. "My congratulations!" he pursued. "I see, as you know, an artist. And I salute your so great art."

Art! For a moment the anguish of that old ache submerged her. Then her eyes met the eyes of Lorillard Morgan, never again to find them enigmatic.

"Art!" she repeated, as the great Figlione kissed her cheek.

"It is the salute," he told her, "of one artist to another."

"Artist!" she repeated after him. What was it that Lorillard Morgan had said that morning, at the automat, about life being whatever you made of it? Her eyes surveyed the softly lighted rooms of the Little White House.

"Ah, well," she sighed happily, smiling upon them both the smile that portrait painters were later to make famous, "why not?"

"Never mind the morning. I don't want to think there's ever to be a morning. I've read about nights under desert stars. Now I know what——"

"But I've heard New England is a whole lot prettier. It's really awful common down here—just sand and mountains and mesas and sky. I've dreamed a lot o' what New England must be like: hills and trees and little old crooked lanes and old-fashioned houses and well-sweeps—and Paisley shawls. My mother had a Paisley shawl. My uncle fetched it from Boston. You ever been to Boston?"

"Heavens! I know Boston like a fellow knows his pockets."

He told her about the gruff old Atlantic, and the night around them deepened, deepened, till little fox-like barks, faint at first, grew plainer on the south.

"You better unlock your tool-box and give me my guns," she suggested. "We don't want no varmints gettin' into our grub along toward mawnin'."

On either side of that camp-fire the fanning embers between them, they stretched themselves after a while. The chill night grew as numbing as the day had been hot. Triple hoots of the tiny owls came from the crags of ebony nothingness around them. The coyote-barks sounded off toward the west and then worked around to the north. Now and then a coal leaped up in a little ripple of flame, yellow as a hen's foot. A rakish wisp of dried greasewood stirred. Within thirty-one miles was no human thing.

"Asleep, Miss Wright?"

"No. I'm watchin' the stars—and thinkin' o' what you been tellin' me about New England. And I wisht you'd call me Mary. Makes me feel you just ain't friendly to talk so formal."

"You want to see the ocean badly—M-M-Mary?"

"It'd be a dream come true."

"M-M-Mary!"

"Uh-huh?"

"Fate directed me here, Mary, all the long way from Vermont, just to linger in this lonely desert basin with you."

He raised himself and glanced across what remained of their fire. She lay on her back, one arm thrown up to pillow her head. He could see her profile, clear-cut as a cameo.

"Mary?"

"What, Mister Robert?"

"Do you know how many men back East, grinding their lives out in factories and shops, long for the kind of women who'll rough it with them in this glorious way—bedded down on warm earth—beside a dying camp-fire—looking up at desert stars?"

He heard her voice come faintly, "And do you know how many western women long fo' the kind o' men-folks who can see any romance lyin' on warm earth beside a dyin' camp-fire, and notice desert stars at all? I been stretched here thinkin' o' that, too."

He said hoarsely, "I'm beginning to believe—I've been wasting myself—on the wrong Miss Wright."

After a time she answered, "Ever since I looked in your chuck-box I been entertainin' some such thought myself!"

Icy winds of desert morning blew the Spanish thorn and greasewood. Owl hoots had quieted and the coyote yaps died away utterly. The embers of their first camp-fire had died to gray and then lampback long before an eery light began diluting the eastern sky-line. Six miles northward the Sunset Limited, from Chicago to Los Angeles, crawled—a child's toy train—across a wasted world.

The sweep of pearly gray along the east grew slowly into henna, apricot, and fallow. Mary Wright, of neither Vermont nor Pasadena, came awake.

"Whatever are you up to?" she demanded.

Bob Hobart crunched his sixth wrapping of tissue-paper and cast it aside as he bent beneath his engine-hood.

"You set out to capture a man, didn't you? I'd say you succeeded. I'm screwing in new spark-plugs so you can take him wherever you want him—and sentence him for life!"

DUMMY

one at the circus lot in the morning would mean the automatic opening of the cage. There would be no way of telling—especially after the first escape. Then there would be the panic, the leaping and twisting of cat animals as they lunged for the stock line in their first frenzied promptings following their escape; the milling of humans to further madden beasts already crazed by fear and the sight of blood—one escape and that would be sufficient. The rest of the beasts would mill in their cages—inevitably they would strike those bars from which the lever lock had been removed—and the wooden coverings without would break! One escape—and all would escape. One kill and they would all kill—horses and zebras first, then humans, in their frenzied lust! And he would be gone—with no one who could tell of having seen him, except, of course, Jake. Which occupied his thoughts not at all. One guilty man does not tell on another. Cap Sleith chuckled thickly. He rubbed a hand over his eyes as though to free them from their dizziness. Then he groped onward in the blackness.

"Which'd he say?" he asked himself. "Fourth wagon from end? Let's see—this nex' one's two—" he staggered on—"humph! Wonder if that's one long wagon or two close t'gether? Guess it's one—that makes three—nex' one ought t' be—"

He swerved in his course. He fumbled under the canvas, removed the end boards, and then, with sudden caution, but his face to the bars.

"Better be careful," came with a little more of soberness. "Nothin' like bein' careful. If anything's in there—it'll growl at me. Hey—you inside—wha's matter you —?"

But there came no sound. A fumbling hand went upward. The iron crossbar dropped. The steel door swung slowly open—then sprawling and directionless, legs doubled uncertainly beneath him, Cap Sleith raised himself to the cage floor, grasped tight at the door to steady himself, then off balance again, tumbled within.

Far away, down at the runs, where wagons were massed at the curbings, where the work elephants went about their labors of the night, where the pull-up teams moved in the calcium glare and heavy wheels clanged on the steel inclines, the train boss suddenly halted in the giving of commands—and turned as though to listen. Then others halted also, to stare, to wonder, then suddenly, the realization, striking simultaneously, to move swiftly into the darkness, down the line of flats. It had come again—again—at last to give way to silence: the scream of a man in agony—and the scream of a Thing in triumph, a screeching, racking scream, as from a throat which had waited but for this!

Craig Kennedy and The Fourteen Points

By Arthur B. Reeve

"You are a good Lambie," she said, tossing the note to the Prince. It is from Figlione. He will receive me at ten o'clock. Now we shall see."

"Lambie!" Margie gasped. "How do you do these marvelous things? First, tickets for 'The Whirlpool,' that's sold out two weeks ahead. Then letters from Figlione! What next?"

Professor Timmy had known that it was difficult to get at Figlione. He had told Mabel not to be discouraged if she waited two weeks. Yet here she sat beside a slim, exhausted looking young man who drew letters from Figlione out of his inside pocket, as if he arranged interviews every morning.

She was aware, after the second act, that Lorillard Morgan was studying her.

"Think you can stick it out?" he asked. She thought it extraordinary of him to have read her thoughts so completely.

"Well," she said, "I don't have to think it just because it's going on before me."

The young man laughed, and said he would tell that to the authors for their encouragement.

"What are you thinking about?" he asked. She wondered if she dared be truthful.

"I was thinking about Figlione. I want to sing for him. How—is it easy—" she stumbled.

The Corrupt Press lifted his eyebrows.

"He's sailing at noon tomorrow," he told her. "Won't be back until April. If I'd known, I could have got that hour for you instead of Rose."

She was horribly disappointed. "I'm to be here only six months," she told him. "I'd hoped so much to study with him."

She did not tell all of this to Herbie just as it occurred, nor that the young man's eyes, when they were not looking amused or satiric, could look very kind.

She wrote that after the play they had gone to the studio of the Princess Sochoff, the great pianist, who had played for her, while she sang, "Si mes vers avient des ailes," and the aria from "Butterfly." The Princess had played much faster than Prof. Timmy. She had said that Mabel must work with her great friend Pietro Cenci. She would arrange an audition very soon.

Concerning Lorillard Morgan she wrote that she thought he was a manager of the New York Press. He had told her that Figlione was going to Europe for the winter.

"So that's that," she ended. "In the spring, when he comes back, perhaps I shall be all the better for waiting."

She told Herbie that she missed him.

"There are so many things here that are different," she wrote. "I wish we could talk about them. Writing is so hard."

One of the things she would have liked to talk about was Rose Stanley. She doubted if Rose were the kind of woman Herbie would admire. That might be overlooked in one who was artiste. What Mabel had disliked most had been that Miss Stanley had not praised her singing. Margie had gasped. Pinky had said, "Great work, Kid!"

Even Lorillard Morgan had told her, without a suggestion of laughter in his eyes, that while anyone could see her as she sang, it was difficult to remember that he should listen rather than look.

"Will you sing some time again," he asked, "while I shut my eyes?"

She did not tell Herbie that, nor that Rose Stanley had not said one complimentary word. After "Si mes vers," she had said, "You must learn French."

After the aria, she had said, "You must work with my friend Pietro Cenci. He may know how to do."

Mabel was able to let Herbie know, in a few days, that the audition with Pietro Cenci has passed off gloriously, and that she was an accepted pupil, rate twenty dollars an hour, paid in advance. Cenci had been more than kind. He had told her that he was a builder of voices, and would add three half tones to her upper register inside three months. Professor Timmy's methods had been totally inadequate and in fact erroneous. The tone was neither thrown forward against the teeth nor felt against the eyebrows. The maestro threw a few of his own tones against his teeth and eyebrows, and Mabel realized that no sounds ever made by Professor Timmy had resembled these sounds. As an eminent exponent of bel canto, he spoke to her of timber and tonal beauty as no one had ever spoken.

Mabel left the studio treading on air. She had told him that she wished to make her debut at the Metropolitan in six months, and he had told her, as he bowed her out in his polite, foreign manner, to leave all to him.

As she walked toward the elevated, however, she thought somewhat seriously of the French and Italian lessons that could be had at three dollars an hour, with a tutor whom he could place at her disposal.

The sum total was rather staggering. It made her decide upon sharing Margie's drawing-room apartment, that had, on her first night, seemed rather crowded and cluttered. Margie and Pinky were paying a hundred dollars a month for it, a colossal bargain for New York. Yet, unless a third partner could share it, they were considering letting it go, and taking some mere hole in the wall for seventy-five or eighty.

Perhaps, she told herself, she would better thank the girls for the chance to hang her clothes in their closet. Even then the monthly hole in her sixty-five hundred dollars would be impressive. She thanked them that evening as they heated a can of vegetable soup over the three-burner gas plate. They were having potato chips and sliced ham from the delicatessen around the corner, topping off with French pastry apiece. It was a good way of beating off old H. C. of L., whose advances they had encouraged by the initiation banquet in Carrie's Cellar.

"Millionaires like you," said Margie, "don't have to think of these things. But the poor working girl learns to watch her step very closely."

She and Pinky got thirty dollars a week apiece for valued clerical services. And Margie had all sorts of ideas for little plays that would coin royalties, when she got them written. Pinky had her eye on bond salesmanship, one of the most lucrative lines open, these days, to women. Meanwhile, they welcomed Mabel's thirty-three dollars a month as well as her society.

Mabel heard Margie say: "You want to keep your eye on Mabel. She's our next stellar luminary."

"She's our Millionaire Boarder," they told the friends who drifted in for an evening by the fireplace.

"She has money in the bank," was Margie's favorite introduction. "And she's going on at the Metropolitan most any time."

It was six weeks before she began to add, "Besides, she's the best cook in New York."

Much as it annoyed Mabel to be pursued by this reputation, she had invited pursuit. The cold lash of rain struck her cheek as she stepped off the bus, on her return from her fifth half hour with Pietro Cenci. She was healthily hungry and yet out of the mood for the porcelain glitter of an automat or the decaying candle light of those Garrets, Cellars, Red Horses, Tea Shoppes and Grottoes in which the three of them had snatched food out of the mouths of the battling pack since she became the Millionaire Boarder. Her own need for something clean and fresh and savory, eaten in a quiet room, was the inspiration of the purchases with which she was laden, as she struggled with her bundles and her umbrella.

"Let me help," said Lorillard Morgan's voice. In her six weeks in New York she realized that few voices had made this request. She smiled at her rescuer.

"I suppose I must tip you," she said.

"Won't you ask me to dinner?" he begged. "Do my eyes deceive me or it that eggplant?"

It was a homelike scene on which Margie made her entrance an hour later. The kitchen table before the cooking hearth stood ready for the food whose odors came from the three-burner gas plate. Lorillard Morgan was beating potatoes, adding cream and butter at Mabel's direction. She was attending to something in a casserole and the proper seasoning of a thick little steak. By the time Pinky had come everything was ready. The something in the casserole turned out to be the eggplant that Lorillard Morgan had indeed seen.

"Real meat!" gasped Margie over the steak later. "And what did you put in that casserole?"

"Just a pinch of something," said Mabel. Everything was exactly right. The eggplant was not merely eggplant. The potatoes were not, Lorillard Morgan told her, pommes de terre, but pommes de ciel. The little rolls were hot clear through. The dish of autum fruits in the center of the table, and the clear amber of Mabel's after-dinner coffee, made the perfect dessert. In deep content the four gorged and relaxed, grew warm and happy.

Outside the wind drove spiteful flurries of rain against the windows, and the loud drip sounded from the eaves of the brick building that was their rear view.

"Sing to us!" begged Margie. Mabel sat down at the rented piano. First she gave them one or two of the new French group on which Pietro Cenci had launched her. Then, with a sense of homecoming, she sang the aria from "Butterfly," then "The Rosary," followed by "The Land of the Laughing Water."

"You didn't close your eyes," she reproached Lorillard Morgan.

"How could I?" he asked.

His eyes persisted in obtruding themselves between her and the letter she wrote to Herbie the next morning. It was a letter telling him that, instead of a Metropolitan debut, this year, Pietro Cenci advised a concert debut in Lorelei Hall. She would make her individual impression upon the critics. Musical New York would be present, instead of the society rabble.

His reply came, just after Pietro Cenci had more fully outlined the details of the Lorelei Hall debut. It could be managed, he had said, for about twelve hundred dollars. Mabel had heard him, appalled. And yet that night, at the dinner to which Lorillard Morgan had asked her, he told her that it was not too much.

"Fame," he said, pushing aside the pink-shaded candle-stick, that they might talk more directly across their little table, "is a calculating jade. Of course, in the end, all the money in the world doesn't accomplish anything, if the essential ingredient isn't there."

"What is that?" she asked.

"Excellence," he said briefly. "Nerve gets you a long way. Money gets you a long way. But if you arrive, you can be pretty sure you're good."

The waiter brought them something steaming and savory.

"This soup," he told her, "is more or less famous for that very reason."

Mabel tasted it. "It seems to me," she said, "that it needs just a pinch of something."

"There are thousands of tragedies in this town," he went on. "Young people come on here with an infinite belief in themselves—and an infinite ignorance. They think they will make their flight to the stars in about fifteen minutes. Thousands of them go under. Some of them starve. They don't all have a bank account behind them, as you have. You can afford to wait."

She thought that the eyes searching her had in them something of warning. But she was to learn much before the waiter brought back the silver remaining from the ten-dollar bill that Lorillard Morgan laid upon his plate. She learned, for instance, that he had written a few plays.

"When will they be put on?" she asked, breathless, almost, as Margie herself.

"Probably never," was his reply. She told him she couldn't believe that, when he knew so many people: Figlione, for instance. Editors. Amazingly he asserted that knowing people helped very little. Managers did not produce plays out of friendship. All their friends had little plays, like daggers, ready to pull out of their boots any time the lights went off. A play, he told her, like a prima donna, had to be good.

"Excellence," he said again. "That's the magic."

Her own hour made its winged approach. Then, at the end of March, she saw a line in the musical announcements for the ensuing week to the effect that Mabel Innis would be heard in recital at Lorelei Hall at three o'clock on Friday afternoon. Fourteen other recitals were scheduled for that week. She had tickets for all of them. Margie, gasping over the wonder and splendor of the event, had accepted her package. Pietro Cenci's pupils and their friends would have a representation. The critics would tiptoe in and out. Herbie and Isabel Allison, scheduled to arrive on Wednesday, would be her guests. The right costume, the sympathetic accompanist, were provided. The groups of songs, Italian and French and German, the aria, the English ballads, all were in rehearsal.

Herbie, blond, magnificent and possessive, came on schedule time, ready for dinner and a show that very night. She fended him off, sorry for the disappointment in his eyes. Wouldn't be take Isabel? After Friday she would be free to lark about. Until then she begged forgiveness.

"It's not much of a welcome," he told her, mutinously.

"I know, Herbie!" she pleaded. "I'm dreadfully sorry. But Friday is the all-important thing, you know. Everything depends on it."

Distinctly, she realized, he was in revolt. Yet what could she do?"

Lorillard Morgan had been different. He had telephoned that he had got the critic on the Press to agree to stay through whichever half of her program she would rather have him hear. And was there any little other thing he could do?

"Yes," she said into the telephone. "When it is over you can tell me what you think of my singing. You know, you never have."

There was a silence at the other end of the wire. Then, "If you really wish me to," he said slowly.

"And you're to shut your eyes while you listen," she told him.

As she hung up her receiver, she knew that, with Rose Stanley's silence, on her first night in New York, Lorillard Morgan's silence had been more vocal than all spoken comments on her voice. Rose Stanley's silence, she felt, had the needed knowledge behind it. She had suspected ignoble jeal-

Gowdy would have acted, I believed, under the same circumstances.

A moment later Julia asked us into the dining-room. There the table was spread with sandwiches and cakes. There was coffee. It was, after all, just an old-fashioned party.

"I know what to do," exclaimed Nan, catching a glance from Kennedy. "You men look lost. I can tell what is the matter. You need a little—smile."

Upstairs she ran, and a moment later returned with what I recognized as one of the packages Kennedy had sent to the apartment. As she unwrapped I saw that it was a bottle of wine. But as she poured she carefully kept the label covered still.

"Now I want you to guess what this is," she cried. "It was given to me. I'll give you each a guess with your glass."

Kennedy guessed it right, but only after I had said I did not know and Jim Camp had hazarded that it was home-made elderberry.

There was amusement among them at that. But to me it showed merely that Jim Camp had exhibited another case of unusual ignorance for him. Either he was extremely cunning or an incredible boob. I was satisfied that my first surmise was correct. It looked almost to me as if he were going so far in his efforts to know nothing and to make mistakes, that he was ridiculous, no matter which man he was.

Well, I thought to myself, taste doesn't work, either.

"Maybe you don't care for that there French wine," now volunteered Jim. My hopes rose at his taking the initiative and doing anything at all—more especially this, as he added, opening the lower sideboard, "Perhaps you'd like a—an orange blossom?" He gave a hesitant glance at his wife as we descried a bottle of gin in the dark recesses under the sideboard.

Julia unbent. "There are plenty of oranges in that dish."

Jim opened a drawer and began fumbling for a sharp knife as Julia produced a large jar and a strainer for the juice. He tried one or two knives, laid them back as too dull.

"What's that, a knife you want?" cut in Kennedy. "I can't oblige you exactly, but try this." Craig had reached over and slipped the steel bayonet from the case on my belt and passed it to Jim Camp.

"Thanks." Camp took the pointed metal ordinarily effective for thrusting with force back of it, but entirely useless as far as cutting an orange is concerned. He took it without comment, too. His face was absolutely innocent of guile, it seemed, as with apparent good faith in Craig's offer he tried to cut the orange.

"It's quite dull, Mr. Kennedy.' He held the bayonet up and felt along its edge lightly with his thumb. "You'd oughter get it ground!"

Craig looked at the man sharply, but his eyes never flickered. Yet Kennedy himself had taken that bayonet and sharpened the edge a bit to make it a cutting edge. There was nothing wrong about that to this Jim Camp—except that it was not sharp enough! If he knew that bayonets depended on thrust, not a razor-like edge for their efficiency, he never showed it.

Each one of these more or less silent little dramas that Craig was staging with the able assistance of Nan to make Jim Camp reveal himself was mighty interesting to me. To me each confirmed my idea that the man was really young Jerry Gowdy playing a game. No one could be so absolutely stupid as this man pretended.

Nan relieved the situation by getting a knife from the kitchen and finished by squeezing the oranges while Jim fixed up the "orange blossoms" with what seemed to me a practiced hand, and thereby, also, betrayed something.

Touch too, had failed. So, I thought, Craig had been going through all the senses in the hope of getting something on this Jim Camp. To me it looked equally as if Jim Camp were using every sense he possessed to defend himself against Kennedy.

I caught sight of Craig in a quiet talk with Nan, and for precaution I engaged Jim and Julia in conversation. Out of the corner of my eye, from the animation of Nan's face, I could tell that Kennedy was framing the plans for some further test. He had been virtually defeated so far. The guests were dispersing now, about midnight, and I wondered what next he would do.

As he said goodnight to Nan, there was a little searching glance that passed between them which might be taken for many things—an understanding look between lovers or a significant exchange of signals between conspirators. I knew which it was.

"Is it a failure—or just a mystery?" I asked as we climbed into the car.

"It's still a mystery, Walter." He seemed in no hurry as we drove along, almost purposeless. "I'm just dropping back to the laboratory for a small package. Then, about two in the morning, when all is quiet, I am coming back to the Gowdy house. I have left your bayonet there purposely, Nan is going to let us in without their knowing. If anything goes wrong the old bayonet will be about as good an excuse as we can find. You must go with me. I may need help."

"Surely. If it's really young Jerry, he'll likely be able to shoot."

We rode over to the city, uptown, and back, leisurely, avoiding the night life in these opera bouffe togs.

We left the car a short distance from the house. That precaution had not been really necessary during our earlier visit, but neither of us knew just how this second visit would turn out.

Evidently Nan had been looking for us. As we walked quietly up the low stoop the front door opened noiselessly. We could just glimpse Nan's face peering at us, white and scared, in the doorway. Her finger was on her lips, adjuring silence.

"They sleep in the front room," she whispered. "My room is in the rear. Another room is between us and probably you can hide there. There's a queer arrangement in the front and middle rooms—a space between them which is divided by sliding doors. When they're closed it makes two private bedrooms. No one is in the middle room now. Sometimes when Jim takes a notion to snore, Julia gets up in the night and leaves that room to sleep in the middle room. But no change has been made yet tonight. Jim's nose seems to be behaving." Nan laughed impishly, quite like any youngster appreciating the humor to be had from a loud snorer.

How we ever trod on those old stairs without giving the whole thing away is beyond my explanation. I had no relish to be taken for a burglar in another man's house. I wanted to be where there was a window, some exit. Craig was right after me, and Nan followed.

"Did you unfasten the sliding doors?" whispered Craig.

"Yes; when they were still downstairs tonight after you left. I don't believe they would notice that the key had been turned. I heard Julia say she was so tired she was going right to sleep. Jim seemed just as dull."

"And you have the things ready I asked for?"

"Yes. They're under the bed. I couldn't find a flat piece of iron. But I got a dishpan and an iron fork. Will that be all right?"

Kennedy nodded.

"It's the best I could do." I could see that Nan was actually trembling over the prospects of the next step.

For the first time now, under Craig's flashlight, I saw that he had brought down from the laboratory a little hand siren that we had once had on a small motor boat. It was a simple enough thing to look at—but why in the name of sense bring a noise-maker like that when we were trying so hard to execute a silent house entry?

"What's the idea?" I whispered.

There was no answer at first. Had Kennedy thought of the neighbors? Had he considered the results of this tomfoolery? What was he to gain, anyway?

"Don't worry, Walter," he returned at length. "Nothing much can happen to us. I'm provided with a warrant. And I'm rather known at police headquarters." I smiled at the ironic answer.

Quietly he was preparing—something. Gently the sliding doors were opened, wide enough for us to get a glimpse of the sleepers in the waving street light, into the front room. Jim was not snoring yet. Julia had both eyes closed in a deep slumber.

Carefully Craig looked all about to be sure everything was ready as he wanted it. Then he signalled to step back into the shadow of the middle room.

He took the siren, muffled it in the folds of a bath towel from the rack. Nan did the same with hand towels partly over both dish pan and iron fork.

"Are you ready?"

"Yes!"

He turned the siren handle briskly. Muffled, it sounded the signal of danger. It moaned, rising ever higher to a crescendo of alarm, then falling, as of a motor boat or car coming.

Nan with the pan and fork also muffled had set up a resonant clatter.

I did not need to ask as I listened and looked at the three of us crouching in the darkness. I saw it now. It was brought back to me yesterday. Just as the men in France would set up such an unearthly racket with sirens, tin pans, old iron, anything that would ring, vibrate, so were Craig and Nan arousing the stillness of the night. Over in France it would mean only one thing: "Gas! Put on your gas masks!"

Was that a sound we heard in the front bedroom? Over each other's shoulders we peered. Some one was moving silently about, groping timidly, uncertain. Some one else was regularly breathing in sleep.

Whoever was moving so slowly was going toward the outer door, the hall door in the front bedroom. Kennedy made sure his flashlight was still working and handy. The breathing continued, a little louder, perhaps, as if the person had been disturbed and in the disturbance had assumed a position difficult for respiration.

Breathlessly we tiptoed into the hall and stood by the other door.

The door knob rattled weakly, futilely, uncertain. Another effort brought no better result. Kennedy quickly flung the door wide open. There was the dim outline of the sleepwalker, as it were.

For just a fraction of a second, shaded, he swung the flashlight.

It was Julia Crandall!

She was not awake, by any means. Her face depicted terror, horror. One hand she held over her mouth and nostrils as if to shut off something, the other over her eyes. What did this apparition mean? We weren't after Julia Crandall. We were after Jim Camp!

"What's it mean, Craig?" I half whispered.

Kennedy motioned silence. We watched him go forward to her.

"You've been in these gas attacks before, nurse?" Softly, subtly his voice sounded. "This is my first!"

"Yes . . . many times . . . Oh! I know them!" Julia murmured, hoarsely. Her voice sounded in guttural tones. She was not herself. Her hands were now fluttering aimlessly. "The gas mask, lieutenant, where is it?"

"Over here."

"Oh, it's awful these days up here in the receiving station, so near the front! We're always fighting the gas. Please—please get my mask! Where is it? . . . It's frightful, all these wounded, suffering boys—and then those fellows gassed—dying! Hear them? Haven't they gone through enough—without this?"

"Let's get out of it now! Come this way. The masks . . . over here!" Kennedy had been thinking quick. "Did that Gowdy chap die?"

"Yes." A shiver. "He was telling me about leaving an uncle and two cousins back in the States. He's been the heir in the will, supposes now that his cousins Jim and Nan will get his uncle's money. Oh, he said everything so coolly I could hardly realize he'd been wounded beyond help. Yes, his strength finally ebbed—and he died." There was another shudder. "Oh, get me my mask, before it is too late." She was clutching her throat. "I feel almost suffocating!"

In the darkness, listening to the terrified girl, I was piecing it together now by sheer logic. This whole experience had been so vivid in her memory ever since, was so indelibly associated with the sound of the siren, that when she heard it in her sleep she was living it all over again.

The semi-conscious girl seemed reassured for the instant, took a step with Kennedy.

Like a flash it filtered into my mind. She had been gassed, too, the night Jerry Gowdy died. That was why she was so frightened now. I imagined that when she was lying sick and helpless she had made up her mind to meet Jim Camp. When she got well she had gone back to nursing privately, had looked up old Jeremiah Gowdy, found he was ill, needed a nurse. Old Gowdy was dying. He was easy in her hands. But she had had to work quickly. She had found the will, copied it, changed the name, got him to sign it. Perhaps he never knew what it was. Then she had made a grand hunt by telegraph for Jim Camp, and had located him. She hadn't wanted the girl to cut in. But Nan had heard, too. Julia had played Jim Camp, made him fall for her, married him.

"Oh, where are those masks! I'm choking!"

There was only a cheer from the front room. Jim was sleeping through it all. It meant nothing to Jim.

"Then—it's Julia—not Jim!" Nan was whispering. "He hasn't reacted to the call, at all. It's the nurse!"

Kennedy bent over, nodded to Nan. By his manner I knew that he had made an instantaneous revision of judgment, that he had been as surprised as we. The nurse had responded, not Camp. Yet I could not help wondering if he had unconsciously felt just an inkling of something like this before. He seemed so prepared for the emergency. He was like a good football player, ready to take advantage of a fumble, any break in the game.

"Yes," he muttered. "When you set a trap you don't always know just what game you'll catch—but if you're a good trapper you'll catch something you want!"

"Where am I?" Julia had opened her eyes wide, staring in surprise and fear. "What was that noise?" She was now thoroughly awake and angry.

Kennedy took her arm now, not quite gently. "That noise? It was the gas alarm you heard in your sleep. Sight, smell, touch, taste failed—but hearing has given Nan Neely her case to contest the will!"

Craig Kennedy and The Fourteen Points

By Arthur B. Reeve

"You think you have been cheated, Miss Nealy, robbed of your share of the Gowdy money?"

[Note: This is the thirteenth of a series of new adventures of Craig Kennedy, scientific detective. —Editor.]

KENNEDY leveled a forefinger. "You think you have been cheated, Miss Neely, robbed of your share of the Gowdy money?" he repeated.

"Yes. When they read Uncle Jeremiah Gowdy's will, I found that my cousin, Jim Camp, was made the sole heir. And Uncle Jeremiah hated Jim Camp worse than he hated me—even after his favorite nephew, young Jerry Gowdy, died in France. I don't believe Uncle Jeremiah would have discriminated between Jim Camp and me. He disliked us both—but for different reasons."

"Why?" persisted Kennedy.

"Well, he hated me because I would grow up to be a woman. His life, he said, had been poisoned by a woman, so he hated us all. Jim Camp he called a slacker, a quitter, a coward."

"And of course," nodded Kennedy, this Jim Camp whom you had never seen showed up to claim the fortune."

"Yes. Strange to say, Jim was at the funeral. He appeared just as silently as they say he once disappeared when he was cut off. Up to that time there was no suspicion by any of us of a new will. At least everyone thought the money would come naturally to Jim and to me, because of Young Jerry's death years ago. But after the funeral the will was read. You can imagine my surprise when I found that everything, even the house in Brooklyn, had been left to Jim Camp. I still can't think it is right."

"Is this will signed?" asked Craig. "Does it look all right?"

"Yes, it seems to be properly signed, and witnessed by Julia Crandall. You see, she was the nurse to Uncle Jeremiah when he died. I suppose they just had her because she happened to be there. The strange part of it is that Jim Camp fell madly in love with her. He gave her a whirlwind campaign, swept her off her feet, and before the week was out they were married. Julia Crandall is good-looking, spick and span, like most nurses. Probably that is one reason why Jim fell for her. I'd never seen Jim before, but he seems so careless of his appearance. I was quite charmed over her at first. She urged me to stay at the house, but I didn't. Now I'm glad I didn't. I feel I have a perfect right to half of that money—and I am going to contest the will."

Nan Neely paused. "You see, what makes it difficult for me is that twenty thousand dollars seems so little to most lawyers to fight over—I mean lawyers who are any good. And I have nothing. But ten thousand dollars would go a long way in getting me the right teachers for my voice. Oh, if I only had it!"

The girl might be naive. But there was nothing scheming or debasing about her. She merely expressed the yearning of an artistic temperament hampered by inexperience and lack of money.

"I can sing," she continued, eagerly. "I know it. But I have had no famous teachers, no chance."

"What was your uncle's reason for feeling so bitter toward you all?" retraced Kennedy.

"It's a long story. Perhaps I can tell you briefly. You see there were three of us, two nephews and a niece—young, Jerry Gowdy, as everybody called him, who died, Jim Camp, and myself. Uncle Jeremiah always liked Jerry best. In fact, Jerry lived with him. I saw Uncle Jeremiah Gowdy several times, but he never asked me to visit him. He came West some time each year to see my mother. But when she died he lost interest entirely in me."

"What became of young Jerry?" I inquired. "I think you said he died in France."

She nodded. "Yes, he was killed in France, in the second battle of the Marne. Young Jerry was mighty fine most of the time and died making a most self-sacrificing rescue of a buddy who had been wounded. They brought both of the men in, but it was too late. Jerry had lost too much blood, and he died. Uncle Jeremiah never forgave Jim Camp for not entering the army. Young Jerry enlisted before the draft, but Jim Camp eyaded the service, proved himself a slacker by taking advantage of some technicality in the draft."

"There was a will then?" inquired Craig.

"At that time the first will had been made. Everything was left to young Jerry, the whole twenty thousand, on condition that Jerry would sign a pledge not to drink. I didn't think anything of that. If Uncle Jeremiah loved young Jerry so much and wanted him to have his money, it was right that he should have it. But there was a decided antipathy, a hatred in his heart, toward Jim Camp. After Jerry's death the bitterness grew and I knew there was never a reconciliation. But here is a new Gowdy will, leaving everything to Jim Camp. I don't believe it is legal. I mean, there is something wrong somewhere. When it comes to settling up the estate now, I feel like fighting. I have as much right to my half as Jim has to his. Neither should have it all. And it means my whole future—my happiness."

"Where has Jim Camp been all these years?"

"No one knows just where he really has been. But we all know he hasn't been near his uncle, even during his last illness. In fact, as I said, after young Jerry went to France, Uncle Jeremiah publicly disowned Jim. He was just indifferent to me and I was too proud to annoy him by any unwanted attentions. Possibly he may have hated me more, but he kept it to himself. It was as if I'd never lived."

"But what does Jim Camp say he did after he was disinherited?" I could not help interrupting.

"Disappeared. He says he has been out on the Coast part of the time. But he never bothered us in Los Angeles."

"You say Jeremiah Gowdy hated women?" repeated Craig, thoughtfully.

I could not imagine him hating Nan Neely if he ever had a good look at her and talked to her.

Her answer was so positive that it made Craig chuckle softly with amusement. "Did he hate women? He hated us so much that he wouldn't look at us any more than he could help."

"Yes; but you say he visited your mother once a year. How did he feel toward her? Not that way, surely."

"N-no. She was his only surviving sister. That was one case where he hadn't allowed his heart to freeze. Until her death he saw her once a year. But he had no use for me, just the same. Mr. Kennedy, don't you think such a violent hatred of all women, good or bad, indicated a weakness, mentally, an incompetency of judgment?" Nan's big eyes were raised directly to Craig's.

Again Kennedy smiled. "A surprising lack of judgment." He paused. "But a broken heart might cause a bitterness so unreasoning that it might amount almost to an insanity. Sometimes, though, it isn't pure hatred, or even bitterness, really—only a mask that some wear through fear, fear of a repetition of blighted hopes and broken dreams."

Nan was silent over that. The romance of the idea stirred her sensitive soul.

A moment later Kennedy resumed. "Are you sure, quite sure, you have told me all you know—or suspect—about this Gowdy will and the persons involved in it?" He eyed her closely. "Isn't there something, else?"

Nan seemed to react to it, not as if she were concealing anything, but as if she were reluctant for some other reason. "Yes," she began, slowly, "there is something. Only I didn't say anything about it because I know how men are, lawyers and detectives and all that. They want facts, not feelings. And I have a—well, a feeling, I guess you'd call it, maybe an intuition. I wouldn't have said anything about it if you hadn't asked the question and looked at me that way."

Kennedy nodded encouragingly. "Let me hear it. You might as well, now."

Nan was looking absently away. "Oh, it's only this. They say young Jerry and Jim looked a good deal alike. Young Jerry might have been a bit stouter than Jim in the old days, but then he was a couple of years older. Besides, Jim, too, may have taken on weight in more than five years. I don't know. I never saw anything but their pictures and heard people talk about them. You see, it's this, Mr. Kennedy. If I didn't know young Jerry was dead, how would I ever know Jim Camp when I met him? There's enough alike about them even in the old pictures." She lowered her voice.

"Just what do you mean by that, Nan?" insisted Craig.

"I—I don't know." Her voice was low and there was a sort of tremble in it as if she felt her thoughts were being torn from her without her consent. Then she raised her eyes, decided to make a clean sweep of it. "I'm not a bit sure this is Jim Camp, really . . . How do I know it is not—young Jerry?"

"Young Jerry?" Craig straightened up at that.

My mind was alert at it, too, eager to hear more of her feelings in the matter. I sensed in it a mighty sensational story for the Star about mistaken or concealed identities.

"But, Nan,"—pursued Kennedy, evenly, "did you notice anything in the actions, the appearance, of this Jim Camp to make you think it wasn't Jim Camp, but young Jerry?"

"Not exactly, except the slovenliness. But then that may have been from the wild roving life he has led in the last few years. Or it may have been a pose. Maybe he isn't really slovenly. Julia Crandall is so—neat. Why did that appeal to him if he isn't that way himself? By opposites? I don't know."

"There's something else, isn't there?" asked Craig, with assurance.

"Y-yes. There is. I smelled his breath. He had been drinking the first time I met him. But in the old days, whatever they said about him, Jim Camp never drank. It was young Jerry did that. That was what rankled in the mind of Uncle Jeremiah. His favorite nephew would get drunk. But Jim, for whom he had no use, seemed to have too much sense for it. It was a galling thing to him."

"Does—er—Jim Camp drink since he married?" I asked.

"No. I don't think so. No, I have heard there has been a most wonderful change in Jim since his marriage."

"H'm!" Kennedy was silent a few minutes as if debating whether to take up the case for the girl or to go on with plans we had had for a vacation. Finally he spoke. "Nan, I'll take up the case for you. If there has been wrong done, I would like to see it made right. And we need good singers."

I was pleased, but could not help putting in my word. "Suppose it is young Jerry. Then you'll lose all, anyhow."

"No, not necessarily. There's this other will. We'll break both, break one on the other, like a couple of sticks. Anyhow, I've lost everything this way. I've got a chance if I can shake either will. None, if I don't. I have everything to gain; nothing to lose."

"Very true," I agreed, still raising questions in my own mind for which I wanted her answers. "But why would young Jerry do it?"

"Oh, there might be reasons. Maybe he didn't want to be known as wild all his life. Maybe he didn't believe he could ever keep the pledge and the money according to the first will. He might have been afraid to lose it. A chance may have come to him, over there. Better to have us think he was dead. He might have recovered, been invalided out of the service. He might have kept in touch in some way with the real Jim Camp. Or Jim Camp might have died. Then he might see a chance to make a come-back, as some one else. Young Jerry might have decided to become Jim Camp, wipe out his black-sheep name with good behavior under another name."

"And plant a will, forged, somehow?"

"Yes, maybe that. Then the unexpected may have happened—and he has fallen in love with Uncle Jeremiah's nurse."

"Now, Nan, let me tell you what I want you to do," began Kennedy to instruct, thoughtfully. "You have said that Julia Crandall, now your cousin's wife, asked you once to visit or stay in the house with her

Good Short Stories from Everywhere

Martyr

An old Scotch lady on her death bed was discussing her funeral arrangements with her husband.

"Ye know, John," she said, "ye haven't spoken to my sister, Annie, for twenty years and my dying wish is that ye drive to the funeral in the same carriage with Annie."

"I'll do it, to please ye," replied John sadly, "but I'm telling ye it will entirely spoil the day for me!"

Getting Even

When he was quite a young surgeon, Dr. Maurice Kahn when dining out one evening was asked by his rather elderly hostess to carve the chicken.

He made sorry work of his task, to the amusement of his hostess, who remarked: "You may be a very clever surgeon, Maurice, but if I wanted a leg taken off I shouldn't come to you."

"No," retorted Dr. Kahn in the same spirit, "but then you're not exactly a chicken."

Willing to Oblige

Art Acord and his director Cliff Smith recently went on location in Bear Valley. Art was called on to do several stunts. Naturally, he was the center of interest to Easterners at the mountain camp and one day while the porch lizzards were discussing his latest stunt a young woman rushed up to Art exclaiming:

"Oh, I wish I had been up in time, I would love to have seen your feat."

"Gosh!" exclaimed Art, blushing and looking toward the ground, "I've still got 'em with me, ma'am."

Still Scrapping

Count Karolyi said on his departure for Canada:

"Your government has treated me harshly, but I am in favor of its peace policies. As a government official said to me the other day:

"'Scrapping armies is the only way to stop armies scrapping.'"

Money-maker

A Los Angeles dentist was complaining the other day about the unfairness of his prices and his calling as compared to that of a regular physician.

"People pay fat fees to doctors and yet kick about their dental bills, seldom stopping to think that a dentist has expenses for materials, etc., and also a great deal of hard labor to perform, whereas a physician, as a rule, gets his money just for advice. I have a friend who is a specialist in skin diseases and one day I asked him how he ever happened to pick on that particular line of work. He said in reply:

"'There are three perfectly good reasons. My patients never get me out of bed at night, they never die, and they never get well.'"

Diplomacy

Lord Beaverbrook on his last visit to New York was apologizing for the sensational features of a London newspaper.

"The paper is full of excellent matter," he said, "and its owners by means of these sensational features induce the people to read it and improve their minds.

"The owners are like the mother who persuaded her little son to have a decayed tooth drawn by saying:

"'Remember, darling, it will be one less to clean.'"

Question of Color

Secretary Edward Cummings of the World Peace Foundation was advocating disarmament at a Boston luncheon.

"But," said a banker, "how can we disarm? Look at the trouble in Morocco. Look at the Japanese and the Chinese question Think of the yellow peril these things forbode."

"My dear sir," replied Mr. Cummings, "there'll be no yellow peril as long as we act white."

Rainy Day Stories

Mrs. Langtry—Lady de Bathe—was congratulated at an Anglo-American dinner party in London on her book of memoirs.

"Luckily," she said, "I have always kept a very full diary."

And then she turned to a pretty Chicago girl and added:

"Keep a diary, my dear, and some day your diary may keep you."

Bulls' Eyes

Philip Miller, the amateur trap-shooting champion, told a story at a Chicago banquet.

"Buffalo Bill," he said, "was entertaining a shooting party at his ranch. Among the guests was a French count, and when the day's sport ended Bill went up to him and asked how he had made out.

"'Of ze birds I 'ave none,' said the count. 'Zey are too difficile. But of ze wild cows and calves, I 'ave nine ovair ze 'ill.'"

Sob Stuff

"These rich muddlers who sympathize with our European debtors and tell them not to worry about paying their debts get very little thanks from their foreign hosts," said a Senator at a Washington reception.

"Our debtors, you see, are like the spoiled child.

"This child was crying, and his fond mother bent over him to wipe his eyes. But he dashed her handkerchief away and snarled:

"'What are ye wipin' my eyes for? I ain't done yet.'"

Two Outs

Secretary Hoover said at a Houston banquet:

"Germany is coming back, and America and England and France and Italy will have to strain every nerve to compete with her. Yes, we'll all have to stop our labor troubles and our profiteering and everything else that increases prices and diminishes production.

"Either that," Mr. Hoover ended, "or we'll have to pitch in and give Germany another licking so as to make the world safe for inefficiency."

Literal Truth

"John," observed his wife, in a rather ominous voice, "I found some very queer-looking tickets in your desk this morning."

"Did you, dear?" replied John, innocently.

"Yes. One of them said, 'Ptolemy, 100 to 7.' What does that mean?"

"Oh, that concerns my archeological studies, my dear," responded John. "Relic of a lost race. Gone, but not forgotten!"

Cause for Worry

Mischa Elman said at a bachelors' dinner before his marriage in San Francisco:

"There's a story about a young musician's wife, who a year after her wedding was blessed with triplets. Another young musician's wife came to see the healthy, beautiful babies—all girls—and the proud mother said:

"'About these darling triplets—it's rather a striking coincidence—nothing supernatural, of course—but the night of our wedding George's orchestra serenaded us with 'Three Little Maids from School'—from 'The Mikado,' you know."

The other young musician's wife gasped and turned pale.

"'Why, what's the matter?' asked her hostess.

"'Nothing—only'—and the visitor smiled in a horrified way—'only at our wedding five months ago Jim's orchestra serenaded us with the 'Floradora Sextette.'"

He Did

The following story told at the recent convention of the National Retail Hardware Association got a laugh.

An old fellow took a load of produce into market. Receiving a higher price than he had expected, he decided to surprise his wife; so he bought himself a new outfit—clothes, hat, shoes and all. He put them under the seat of his wagon and on his way home, stopped by a river to change his clothes. Deciding his old clothes were useless, he threw them into the river, but when he looked under the seat, he found the new clothes were missing.

He scratched his head for a moment, then climbed aboard the wagon and said: "Get up, Maude, we'll surprise her anyhow!"

Wise Guy

Frank Lawrence has been trying to teach Viola to drive his car and for a while Vi practiced and practiced. Then, one day, she quit cold, and nothing would induce her to take hold of the steering wheel.

"What was the trouble?" asked Blanche, Mickey Neilan's cutter. "Did you get cold feet or have an accident?"

"No," explained Vi. "But I found out why Frankie wants me to drive. He said that if we ever got into a jam, I could out-talk any traffic cop in California, the mean thing."

Opportunity

An automobile, racing with an express train, made the crossing a second too late and its fragments were distributed along the track for a hundred feet. One of the three occupants, miraculously unhurt, sat up and wiped the dust from his eyes.

"I say," shouted an excited man, hurrying toward him, "has the superintendent been along?"

"No," returned the victim.

"Well, has the railroad attorney been here yet?"

"Of course not," the man growled.

"And has the claim agent come?" persisted the other.

"Hang it, no!" exploded the man on the ground. "Can't you see this thing has just happened?"

"Well, then," smirked the man, "would you object if I lie down beside you?"

It will give me a chance to study this Jim Camp. Humble yourself for your rights. Act as if you thought ten thousand dollars wasn't worth fighting for and you had given up all idea of contesting the will."

The girl nodded. "I can do that. I love to act—act and sing. When shall I begin to be friendly?"

"Right away. Call up Jim Camp. Tell him you have about decided to go back to California in a few days and thought you would like to go back at least good friends with your nearest relatives."

Nan's face flushed with eagerness. "If there is anything phony about this Jim Camp, do you think I'll be safe?"

"That, Nan, is what I want to arrange with you. Your cousin must know that you sing. I want you to bring it about so that they'll consent to a musicale, or some quiet evening party for you, before you go, something to speed the parting guest. You must play your cards well."

"But how will a musicale help me to protect myself?" she inquired timidly, puzzled.

"The musicale will not help you. But the sooner you can arrange it, the sooner I can be sure of this new will. It will be a means of my getting in the house to see you. They will suspect only one thing, a romance, and will probably encourage my coming to visit you."

Nan smiled, and a few moments later left us.

Along in the afternoon Nan called up. "It worked, Mr. Kennedy," she exclaimed in excitement. "When they thought I was going back to Los Angeles without causing any trouble for them, their hospitality was amazing. I'll let you know when I can have the musicale."

Kennedy went out, but, since he did not ask me to accompany him, I decided he was doing a little sleuthing and took the opportunity to do some on my own. I sought to hunt up the past friends of Jim Camp's in the city, some of the boarding-houses he had frequented. I found that there had been such a chap, but that was about all. He had been swallowed up completely. All that people knew was that they had heard he had gone West. I began to wonder what was really the significance, perhaps hidden to them, in "gone West."

That evening I found Craig with a number of bundles in our quarters. He was not disposed to confide what had been his intentions in his shopping tour, nor did I question him.

Nan Neely dropped in to see us in the laboratory the next forenoon. She was apparently delighted at her reception at the Gowdy house.

"I'm going to have my party much sooner than I expected," she imparted.

"When?" asked Kennedy.

"Tonight. Will you be ready?"

"How did you get her to consent to it so soon?"

"Two reasons. I think they want to get rid of me, ship me east of Suez, and by flattery, too. I mentioned that I was going home after I had a chance to say farewell to some friends here. Then after she heard me sing, Julia was ready for the musicale idea. She has suggested only just a few of our most intimate friends. Of course you and Mr. Jameson come under that."

"May I have something to say about the program you arrange for tonight?" queried Craig. "I would advise you to keep the evening decidedly informal. For reasons that I can explain better when I see you there I would suggest a very patriotic program, something pertaining to the World War and the A.E.F. Let gentle hints fall that you intend to make it a patriotic evening, perhaps even that you may have as an intermission to the music some games that you have played before and enjoyed. I can tell you about the games when I get there. You can say you think such an evening would be a nice bit of sentiment for the memory of the hero of the family."

There was vivacity, animation in Nan Neely as she planned with Craig. Her career meant everything to her. Here, she felt, was a legitimate chance to help herself on her way, in some manner to advance toward a fair division of the legacy.

It turned out to be one of those cool, snappy evenings in October when living is a joy.

"I have laid your clothes all out for you, Walter," informed Craig as we went up to our apartment after an early dinner. "They're on your bed."

It was said innocently enough, but the act was unusual. "Since when have you been playing valet to me?" I asked, in some doubt whether I was to be laughed at or with.

On my bed I discovered a most unusual array of apparel—not a thing that I had expected to find. My evening clothes, everything I usually wore to an entertainment in the evening, were still reposing in closet and drawers. And here was this stuff, this O.D.

"Theirs not to reason why!" Since my association with Craig those seemed to be general orders.

Gingerly I picked up these clothes. I knew they were not mine, yet they seemed to be about my size. Here was a captain's uniform and insignia. Had he been rifling one of those Army and Navy stores? Not being quite fully acquainted with the program, I did not hurry dressing. In fact, I had not started when the door opened and Craig walked in.

Could I believe my eyes? Kennedy was

MY LOVER

By PATIENCE MARSHALL LEAVER

Like the Sun God came my lover
  Brightening all the road along.
Gone my night, repose, and dreaming,
  In my heart a burst of song.

Like the dormant earth awakened
  (Such bold arts did he employ)
All my spirit was unfolded
  To that warmth of love and joy.

Like the Sun God went my lover—
  (Ah, with none he tarries long!)
And as color fades with twilight,
  So my heart has hushed its song.

saluting me. But somehow it didn't seem just right. In fact, nothing seemed just right. Feebly my memory was stirring back to the days when those olive-drab ranks of men went stepping blithely by to entrain for camp or transport. But none of them looked just like Craig. His eyes gleamed with mischief.

"What's the matter? What's wrong with this picture?"

"Wh-at's wrong? Why—everything's wrong. It's a patriotic party, I suppose. But those clothes! You think it's a burlesque? You have on a lieutenant's suit, but, great guns! man, you're wearing cuff leggin's with it! Oh, boy! your Sam Browne belt is looped through the wrong shoulder. And when you came in you saluted with the left hand—and such a salute! Say, if a real soldier ever saw you he would give you the bum's rush."

"Never mind me. Get into your own togs. I hope you are right."

Now I began to see Kennedy's strategy. He expected to trap this alleged Jim Camp. If it were really young Jerry Gowdy returned and reformed, he would surely betray his familiarity with the American forces abroad when he surveyed Kennedy. He could not help it. His very amusement and knowledge, even though he said nothing, would amount to a betrayal.

I returned to an inspection of my own clothes with added zest. What was in my prize package? It was not long before I had on my captain's uniform. But with it I was expected to wear a private's cap, and on my arm the service chevrons had been inverted. The only things I liked about the ensemble were my officer's boots. They made my feet look as nifty as ever.

"Stick me jes' as deep as you wanto, but don't fasten that on me," I objected as Craig appeared with a medium as a shell to fasten to my belt. "I'm a captain!"

"We may need it," he said, merely, going ahead with the fastening.

"Say, you don't think the party's going to get rough, do you?" I inquired.

"You never can tell. I may need to use it."

I began to feel a thrill of excitement over the adventure itself, however, as we drove up to the Gowdy house. It was a very old frame house, the kind one often sees in the older parts of Brooklyn.

Evidently Julia was reckless with lighting. Every room seemed lighted. I was glad the street was dark as we parked our car, locked it, and left it some distance up from the house. Craig rang the bell, and I was pleased when the door was opened by Nan herself.

But such a Nan—the sweetest little buddy of them all. She was attired as an ambulance driver and correctly.

"I hope you can sing," she imparted under her voice. "You'll have to help me out with the war songs. Jim says flatly he can't sing and nobody's going to make a fool of him." She glanced skeptically at us as she said it.

There was a suspicion racing through my mind, also. Just why wouldn't Jim Craig sing those songs the boys sang during the war. Was it that he feared to show that he knew them too well? I wondered if that was what Kennedy was thinking, also.

Nan was a lively little hostess. "We're just plain folks here, so make yourselves at home. I'll call Julia and Jim." Then she whispered. "If they seem very curious concerning you, Mr. Kennedy, play the part. I have let them think as they please about us."

With a laugh she turned quickly and led us into the living-room. "Julia, this is Mr. Kennedy—and Mr. Jameson."

I saw Jim Camp look up at us with interest. He seemed to be observing us both carefully. I held my breath with suspense. Except for the usual acknowledgements in meeting strangers he was decidedly reticent. If he had noticed anything wrong with our uniforms, he carefully kept it to himself. I began to think this man called Jim Camp must really be young Jerry Gowdy and that he was indeed a clever man. He was able to keep his thoughts to himself and in these days when so many people talk themselves into jails and out of friendships, few are blessed with the cleverness of silence.

Right away Kennedy's attack through the sense of sight had failed, at least so far.

There was nothing very arresting in the appearance of Julia except that she possessed to an unusual extent that practical feminine adaptation to surroundings. Her hair was dark, much of it, too, and fastened in graceful coils at the back of her head. She had a rather pale face lighted with brilliant dark eyes. Her other features kept her from being handsome. It was easily seen, too, that hers was the stronger will. Jim Camp seemed to feel that doing her bidding was the height of bliss.

A few other guests, friends of Julia, arrived, and I was glad to note that none of them seemed to have seen service overseas. I know they hadn't, because they took our uniforms to be bona fide.

Somewhere Nan had found a pianist capable of accompanying her. When all the guests were assembled and chatting perfunctorily, Nan stood before us. "We're going to have a real old-time soldier night for my friends.' She nodded toward us. "But not for worlds would I disappoint you about my singing. I am going to sing first the 'Mad Scene' from 'Lucia'; following that, 'Some Day He'll Come' from 'Madame Butterfly.'"

The girl was gracious and simple in her manner and really possessed a wonderful soprano. It needed more training, naturally, but there was the voice, feeling, and charm. Nan Neely had far to go once she started in her profession. No wonder she preferred a conservative, concert platform entrance into the musical world to the uncertain chorus-girl entrance. As the last notes of her second selection died away there was genuine applause. Even Julia conceded it.

Hardly had the enthusiasm subsided politely when Nan was singing with spirit "The Star-Spangled Banner." In her uniform, her fervor was contagious, and I felt it as I stood up to join her in spite of my unfamiliarity with the people about me. But Jim held back. Never a note did he sing. At least, if he were young Jerry, he was clever enough not to betray himself through what he saw or what he said. His very aloofness now made me more certain he was the favorite nephew.

Nan was undiscouraged. She looked up brightly. "Let's have a good old-fashioned sing. Just the songs we all know."

She began with "Pack up your troubles in your old kit bag, and smile, smile, smile." Then she started, "Oh, how I hate to get up in the morning."

Everybody joined in and enjoyed it with the exception of Jim. Most of the time he was silent. At other times his lips were merely moving mechanically in the familiar choruses. It was the same with "Over There" and "Where do we go from here." Not a sound escaped his lips. Nan concluded the moment with, "Hail, hail, the gang's all here."

I was watching Jim Camp closely now. He seemed tired. Sometimes his eyes were closed. I wondered what was the matter.

In a pause, Kennedy pulled from his pocket a packet of French cigarettes that were smoked a great deal over there by our boys when they couldn't get the American brands that the war made famous. I hadn't smoked one for a long time, but I recognized the aroma of them the moment I took the first puff after Kennedy had offered them around.

Jim Camp took one lazily, only looking at it with mild curiosity. He lighted it casually and began smoking. Now I was interested.

Jim Camp smoked that fag with about the same amount of appreciation as if it had been cornsilk. Smell didn't work either.

So far, with each test, there had been no response, nothing apparently to excite recollection of the service. Yet I was still unconvinced that this was Jim Camp himself. He was certainly acting just as young Jerry

A Stinging Rebus

By SAM LOYD

A fellow who has earned the reputation of drawing the longest bow in our village received an anonymous postal card of which our sketch is a copy. He feels sure it contains some hidden reflection on his propensity for telling whoppers, but can't just figure out what it is. Can you read it for him?

A CHARADE

Two words there are—the first will tell
What may be found in many a soil,
Where various treasures silent dwell;
And if you know their natures well,
The second may reward your toil.
Unite them and you'll quickly guess
What I have tried in vain with you;
'Tis what I used, I must confess,
With little skill and less success,
To hide my meaning from your view.
What is the word?

RIDDLES TO GUESS

LADIES FIRST

Billy Binks, the elevator boy, found a superabundance of people waiting on the ground floor for his car, so he made a diplomatic speech, as follows:

"You'll have to draw lots for the first trip. I can carry five ladies and eight men; or six ladies and twelve children; or ten children and six men."

Of course, the ladies went first, so let us figure out how many fair passengers Billy was able to carry on the trip.

Favorite Inventions

Trick shoe laces, collar buttons and shirt studs are among the greatest favorites with inventors who file applications for patents in the Patent Office at the rate of beween seventy thousand and eighty thousand a year.

In the records of the office, where more than a million and a half patents have been granted, there is evidence of attempts beyond counting to provide a substitute for the shoe lace that persists in tangling itself into a knot. The same may be said of devices for attaching a man's collar to his shirt.

And yet, unfortunately for the inventors, all this genius and effort have been wasted, declares Frank C. Skinner, senior member of the Board of Examiners of the Patent Office. For, he says, "with mortal perversity we still cling to the old-fashioned shoe string that spoils our dispositions, and the time-honored style of collar button still endures."

Telling of his forty years' experience as a Patent Office official, Mr. Skinner has just revealed in the Popular Science Monthly some of the surprising oddities in inventions that have come under his notice.

One man, he says, sought to give the world a shoe string with each end fastened into a loop to be fitted over the top hook of the shoe—requiring that each lace be of exactly the right length for the particular shoe with which it was worn. Another brought out "a string that need not be tied," in the form of a lace with solid rubber ends.

Among the many devices for attaching the collar to the shirt, one inventor offered a protecting pin to engage and fasten the necktie and "keep it from moving up and down." Another presented a "combined shirt stud and magnifying glass." The purpose of this invention was "to enable a shirt stud to be used also an an optical instrument for viewing and magnifying photographs, portraits and other pictures, and geological, entomological, botanical and other objects."

Alarm clocks are old favorites with inventors. As a sure cure for the habit of ignoring the morning call, one man invented a device that tripped the legs of the bed and dropped the whole outfit to the floor, occupant and all.

There are styles in patents as in clothing or millinery. The introduction of the automobile brought a vast torrent of applications relating to motor production and operation. Motion-picture apparatus and devices also have held the center of the stage in recent years. Now radio is demanding and receiving its share of attention, along with aviation and new applications of electricity.

The Mind Meter

By J. LOWELL HENDERSON

This intelligence test is the same type of test as the one given last week. The instructions for each specific problem are given under the number for that problem. Do just what the instructions say to do. In general, underline the correct answer unless you are instructed to do otherwise.

LITTLE OLD TOWN

By Fannie Hurst

THE Carraways lived in Peola. One of those commonplace corned-beef-and-cabbage little towns with exotic orchid names that line the Vandalia railroad tracks.

There was a People's Bank, a chain grocery store, a new one-story concrete post office and a gasoline station, visible from the train as it sped past.

Also a glimpse of base-burner in the little brick station and an invariable truck of milk cans drawn up at the edge of the platform.

You could see the roof of the Carraway cottage, too, if you knew just which particular elm trees to look between as the train shot again into open country.

Marion Carraway and her daughter Marion-Jane lived on Elm street, two blocks from the station in a cottage of the sort you see on calendars. Rambler roses did clamber over a front gate with a canopy built over it for them to climb up on. A red brick walk, reddened by Marion Carraway on Tuesdays and Saturdays, led up to a front door that in June was half hidden under more climbing roses.

Marion Carraway was a seamstress, and when she sewed in that open doorway, every once in a while she took a deep, audible breath. Of pleasure.

Marion-Jane, her daughter, worked in the telephone exchange. There never was a time, in sitting there at her sewing thinking of her, that the mother's heart did not seem literally to contract with the parent's cardinal emotions of pride and joy in offspring.

Marion-Jane was so pretty. So young, in an adorable boyish way! And full of such swagger, too. Marion Carraway loved to sew for her far into the night, after the orders were out of the way. It was a thankful job, sewing for Marion-Jane. She wore her clothes so well. In a debonair way that reminded the mother of the father who had left her widowed since the year of Marion-Jane's birth.

At all the local entertainments, Marion-Jane carried off the honors. She sang so charmingly. In a high, thin, saucy little voice that delighted. And danced! From a very little girl Marion-Jane had danced through that cottage. Been its sunshine. Its life and its vitality.

People said she ought to go on the stage. That is how it must have started. The townspeople, full of admiration for the quality of mime and terpsichore in Marion-Jane, felt it about her sincerely. With her prettiness and her wittiness Marion-Jane was a born actress. Marion-Jane ought to go on the stage.

And slowly the idea, dripping, dripping upon that pretty head of Marion-Jane's, penetrated. It was after the annual entertainment given by the Telephone Exchange employees for charity, that Marion-Jane came out openly and rebelliously and announced her determination to go on the professional stage. And Marion Carraway, who had fought the idea determinedly, consistently, over a period of three years, realized suddenly the futility of further opposition. There were green little flames of anger at the flanges of Marion-Jane's nose, most of the time, these days, and some of her prettiness was already dissolving into little lines of bitterness that had no place upon the lovely blondeness of her face.

With her heart heavy within her, Marion Carraway realized that the time had come to give in. And giving in, to Marion Carraway, meant giving up. Giving up the little home that had become, as it were, part of her very heart. Partly because she had paid for it with stitches and eyesight and spinal-column, and largely because it had been the scene of the dancing into girlhood of her Marion-Jane.

When Marion decided that she must give in, that is exactly what it meant. Giving up. Giving up.

She would no more have permitted Marion-Jane to set out alone! Marion-Jane, whose loveliness and innocence and darlingness were jewels to be guarded. So when Marion-Jane set out from Peola in her search for fame, Marion Carraway went, too. With the proceeds from the sale of the little cottage safe on checking account in the People's Bank and more tears in her heart than she ever imagined it could hold.

Marion-Jane had her bad times. Her very bad times. Months of the kind of disappointment that can glimmer across youth and sometimes save up scars on old age. It was not the disappointment that mattered so much those first months. After all, there was the checking account behind them. It was the life in a box. Hotel rooms that smelled of sour flesh and the breath of disappointed sighs. Dim, cat-ridden courtyards for vista. Long unavailing tramps through city streets that seemed to fly up and slap Marion and Marion-Jane in the face.

Months of it. And Marion-Jane, who had been lovely as a field flower is lovely, taking on some of the sophistication of the city flower. It seemed sometimes that there were too many tears in Marion's heart ever to flow out.

And then one day, at a try-out in a vaudeville agent's office, something in Marion-Jane got itself across to a producer with his eye out for the little eccentric charm that bubbled up through the surface commonplaceness of Marion-Jane's performance.

Two or three suggestions from the producer who detected it brought out a streak of fantasy and humor that transformed Marion-Jane's performance from the flavor of the strawberry festival to something with a tang and a distinction.

Three weeks later Marion-Jane started on a cross-country vaudeville tour that kept her employed forty weeks of that year.

The next year, even though she was not a headliner, her salary almost doubled. And at the end of five years Marion-Jane Carraway was a well-known song-and-dance artist on the largest vaudeville circuit in the country.

Marion-Jane and her mother traveled in a compartment now and went to and from the theater in taxis and ate after-performance suppers in the best grill rooms.

And Peola! Every once in a while, Marion-Jane played her home town. And how they flocked. And how Marion-Jane and her mother held court in the little old St. Charles Hotel where Marion-Jane had dined only once during her residence in Peola—that occasion being the celebration after a Knights of Columbus entertainment in which she had appeared.

Marion Carraway's old cronies crowded around her, full of whole-hearted joy in the good things that life had brought their old friend.

The old cronies she had left behind her to take to the open road with her daughter. Most of them looked older now than Marion. Monotony in small towns can accomplish that. Many of them had died. Some of them she had to visit in their homes, since decrepitude was upon them.

She was a breath to them from an outer world. A world of success and of the better things of life.

And always, particularly when it came time to have the outgoing train flagged for them to board it as it sped through Peola, it seemed to Marion again that the tears in her heart could never exhaust themselves. Never once in all of their returns to Peola did she dare to allow herself to pass the little house on Elm street.

It would have hurt too much.

The Wisdom of Woo

By John Stuart Twist

Long ago by the River Sin,
Woo Sing Lo, the mandarin,
Musingly sat and rubbed his chin
And watched the worldly ships come in.

Clumsy junk with spotted wales,
Persian galley with crimson sails,
Native creek boat, bamboo rafts,
Freebooter and fishing craft:
Out of the Enigmatic Where,
Beyond the Vale of Sky-Blue Air;
Mysteries for Joss to know—
For Joss to know—and Woo Sing Lo—
Who sat alone and rubbed his chin
And watched the worldly ships come in.

Merchants, thieves and wanderers,
Miser-men and squanderers,
Bearded Hindoos, swarthy Moors;
Black men chained to Roman oars
With Gauls and sad Helvetians;
Mystical Phoenicians:
Out of the Enigmatic Where,
Beyond the Vale of Sky-Blue Air;
Mysteries for Joss to know—
For Joss to know—and Woo Sing Lo—
Who sat alone and rubbed his chin
And watched the worldly ships come in.

One day, a friend, heavy with woe,
Told his sorrow to Woo Sing Lo;
The mandarin with keen surmise
Gave counsel which was passing wise.
The friend told all his fellow-men,
And they told other folk—and then,
People thronged to the Gardens of Woo
To learn the things the Wise Man knew.

Propounded riddles to harry his brain,
And found their efforts all in vain.
For, out in the Enigmatic Where,
Beyond the Vale of Sky-Blue Air,
Were Mysteries for Joss to know—
For Joss to know—and Woo Sing Lo—
Sitting thoughtfully, rubbing his chin,
As he watched the worldly ships come in.

A Cynic came to the Gardens of Woo,
Sneered a little, as Cynics do,
Fanned himself with a gossamer fan
And said to the Seer, "Thou Charlatan,
Thy life all lived in thy gardens here,
What knowest thou of an outer sphere?"
Then the fools in the Gardens of Woo
Began to laugh, as Fools will do;
But all the Wise Men there that day
Listened to hear what the Seer would say.
Then, Woo Sing Lo, the mandarin,
Nodded toward the River Sin.
"Fools," he said, "can ye not see
That the whole, wide World comes here to me?"
And he merely winked and rubbed his chin,
As he watched the worldly ships come in.

So Emperors came and Beggars came
To know the truth of the Wise Man's fame;
Through sage precept and prophecy,
Learned of the things they could not see—
Out in the Enigmatic Where,
Beyond the Vale of Sky-Blue Air;
Mysteries for Joss to know—
For Joss to know—and Woo Sing Lo—
Who sat alone and rubbed his chin
And watched the worldly ships come in.

grinding along in its stubborn Dutch way—ponderous, determined, unimaginative. De Pulva, the fiery Italian, was shooting out recklessly in front, burning up his tires and paying for it with lightning visits to the pits. Swanson, the "Savage Swede," fought his car as usual, punishing it on the curves with vicious flips of the wheel during which the rear wheels hit for the sky and were pulled down like the heels of a startled horse. Chet Gibson, cool and calculating—reckoned a "safety" driver—was setting his own pace, without regard to the others. And as usual, the procession of comets was being led at this stage of the race by the French Beau Brummel, Marcel Leroux, always a popular figure with the crowd, but seldom in the money at the finish. Marcel's dashing temperament couldn't stand more than a hundred miles of dueling; neither could his car. They always cracked under the final pressure.

But it was not for these men that a little town had mortgaged its municipal soul. Nor for these men that seventy-five thousand people had assembled, among them a girl who, white-lipped and trembling, comprehended for the first time the fearful peril of the glory-seekers. All eyes—including those of Diana—were watching a black car with a white "9"—snub-nosed and ominous, and guided by the king of them all, wild Tom Meredith.

The crowd was strangely silent, for the Racing Fool of the speedways had not yet fulfilled the demand upon him. Not once had he taken the lead; not once had he brought the crowd to its feet, shouting his name. The Black Butterfly, sole remaining hope of the factory, was lagging in the rear, apparently unable to wing its way to the front. It too was reflecting the mood of its master.

From the very start of the race Meredith's subconscious mind had succumbed to a shadow. Whether it was really a premonition of what lay ahead, or depression due to what lay behind, is a matter for psychologists to determine. Meredith only sensed that this was to be his last race, and exactly as though he were drowning, the events of his life were re-enacted photographically on the sensitive film of his subconscious mind. His body was an automaton, hands on the wheel, eyes on the track, and the wind whistling wickedly in his face; but his inner consciousness was occupied with long-forgotten incidents, and their reportrayal fascinated him.

Life after all is best seen in perspective; wherefore the past has its unfailing charm. He understood things now that he had never comprehended before. Bitterness went out of his heart, and he felt more kindly toward this little town; he saw it in a new light—even grew to love it. Why, it was his home town, his birthplace—the spot where Diana had first seen the light of dawn, had comforted him in his sorrows and kissed awake his courage. And now Calora, shaking off the lethargy of forty years, had called him back as its honored son—called him back to help start a new era in the town's development.

Suddenly the drama of it hit him full force, snapping the bonds of emotional restraint. Diana—the triple-A Crown—the glory of Calora—vindication of his name and birth! They were all emotional impulses that shocked him into consciousness. This was his day, and nothing should rob him of it—nothing!

The cars were roaring down the backstretch in the ninetieth lap. In the pits, Blubber Doyle, watching through field-glasses, suddenly emitted a war-whoop and flung his cap into the air. "There he goes!" he shrieked. "Go get 'em, Meredith! Go on, you wild man! Ya-hoo-o-o!"

The moment had come for which the packed stands had been waiting, and the crowd responded now as one man, erect and vociferous. Meredith was "stepping on it," and they understood at last why he was called the Black Ghost. They had never seen such speed, such driving! The black car had become a blurred shadow that was rapidly overhauling the field.

It was a phantom butterfly that gained on the swishing leaders, caught them, and then began to flit through in a figure "S"—weaving back and forth at a hundred and thirty-five miles an hour, and never clicking a hub-cap. On the hundredth lap he did it again, and this time went into the actual lead, taking the pole and skimming out in front, a reckless son of Hermes, piloting a black destroyer of space and time.

In the pits the mechanics were holding up blackboards chalked with huge white signals "G-9"—"G-9"—"G-9." That meant: "Get Number Nine!" "Get Meredith."

In a race where men were dropping out and re-entering, it was hard to keep track of who was actually in the lead. The drivers nodded now as they thundered past. They understood that the Black Ghost was in front, and they set out to drag him down.

Remember that not once had Meredith gone into the pits for a tire-change. De Pulva had renewed all four wheels on the eightieth lap, and now he was driving like a demon, the nearest man to the leader. If Meredith stopped now, the race was lost, with all that it meant!

Wild Tom was the first to see it—a thin white streak showing in the left front tire. And the streak widened as he watched!

So, that was it! Death had flung down its challenge. Fate had uncovered its trump card! Destiny was daring him to go on! Well, so be it. His jaw-muscles bulged, and he forgot everything but the blind lust to win.

He roared past the shouting stands, and the green flag signaled: "One more lap to go!" He was blind to Blubber Doyle, waving frantically from the pits, blind to everything but the spreading white streak on that tire. He felt only the pressure of a mechanic's arm around his shoulders, heard only the voice of young Cheever shouting frantically into his ear: "De Pulva! De Pulva! De Pulva!"

By that cry he knew that the Italian was at his heels. Down went his foot, and the Black Butterfly became a singing comet scorching its way along a boarded skyline!

And there was the goal at last! Tired, straining eyes recognized the finish—tumult—dark crowded stands that rushed to meet him—the figure of Wagner crouched on the sideline with the checkered flag that means: "You have won!"

Fifty car-lengths—twenty—ten! Nothing could beat him now. He had kept the faith! Flash of blinding black, fall of checkered flag as he passed the line, and then—bang! The left front tire exploded, and the Black Butterfly swerved in its flight, plunged, spun twice around—appeared to hesitate—

Even with the swiftness of the blow, Meredith's mind reacted instantly, obeying the training of years. He thought of the young mechanic at his side, thought of his comrades behind him, and with all his skill he struggled to save them. He guided the car in its last struggle so that it did turn over, and he was pinned beneath it, young Cheever was thrown clear, and the wreck was out of the path of those behind. Then the sun went out, and he floated off into the moonlight that he loved . . .

No, he did not die. "God's luck" had ridden with him.

He realized it when the fractured skull had mended, and he discovered that he was in Diana's home, and that it was she who had nursed him back to life.

News of his return to consciousness spread through the village, and to his bedside they came to pay their tribute—even old Jud Higginbotham, the town pessimist and skinflint.

"We're all for you!" said Jud. "Durn tootin! If you hadn't already won all the money in the town, I'd buy you a new car myself.

"Oh, but he isn't going to race any more," prostested Diana. "I made him promise that."

"Ain't gonna drive?" said Jud. "What's he gonna do?"

"He's going to open up a garage here," said Diana, "and—and, well—you better ask him what else he's going to do."

Wild Tom Meredith reached out for Diana's hand. "That's it, Jud," he declared. "I've won the old race, and now I'm going to stay right here, and 'Watch Calora grow!'"

DUMMY

A Tale of the "Big Top"

By Courtney Ryley Cooper

A GREAT, black beast lay gasping in a corner of his gilded cage, claws extended until their sheer pressure forced their points into the hard oak of the floor boards, yellow eyes gleaming with malevolence, his otherwise glistening coat of ebony marked and scarred in a dozen places by the blows of a bullwhip. His jaws were open, yellow red jaws—open and dripping. His uncannily long tail writhed and circled; the muscles of his short, bowed front legs stood forth like carvings in the excess of their tension; his whole being depicted a grotesque, unearthly mold of torture—yet he gave no cry, no pleading whimper; only that gasping, long tongue hanging over yellow fangs, eyes staring, muscles taut. The blows continued to fall.

Above him stood a man with one sleeve rolled up to the elbow, displaying long, supple muscles which now were hard with the grip of the bullwhip. A tall man, black-haired, black-eyebrowed, with something about him which seemed to carry the hint of similiarity to the weird beast on the cage floor; a man who leaned forward after every blow, his eyes slightly clouded, his form too stiffly balanced for naturalness, his voice bearing a hint of thickness as he railed again and again at the black thing before him:

"Not going to yell, eh? You're not? Still got the fight in you—well, I'll take it out! How's that, Dummy? Or that one—or that!"

Then the shoulders would bulge, the form straighten, swing far back, then lurch forward with the thrust of a blow as the bullwhip whined through the air and cut deep into the flesh of the cowering thing in the corner. Only to bring the same result—nothing but tenseness, those claws dug deep into the oak, the gasping again. Over at the other side of the menagerie tent, a man, just entering from the marquee, halted, pulled his cigar from his mouth, stood in silent survey for a moment, then moved toward the cage. The blackbrowed being had straightened once more, his whip writhing aimlessly on the cage floor.

"You're going to yell!" came viciously. "Either that or I'll—"

The whip rose. The man outside stepped closer, cigar in a corner of his mouth.

"Hey, Cap!"

"You heard me! You're going to yell!"

"Cap! Cap Sleith!"

The tone was commanding, angry. Within the cage, the man turned, whip aloft.

"Call me, boss?" he asked, then moved again to his task. "Be out in a minute. I've got to—"

"Never mind. I want to see you now. Ain't you beat that cat enough?"

"Enough?" Cap Sleith of the Great Amalgamated shrugged his shoulders and sneered. "Enough to make me tired in the shoulders. But it don't have no effect on him."

"Looks to me like it did."

"Well, it ain't. I'm going to stay with it until I get what I want. I'm tired of him acting the way he's been lately—starts a fight with me the minute I come in his den. Begins to crouch—"

"Prob'ly got reason," came noncommittally from without. "Judging from the way you pet him. What're you trying to do anyway?"

"Why?" Cap stared as if in surprise. "I'm trying to cure him. That's all. I'm going to break his spirit."

"His spirit, or his back?"

Cap Sleith straightened, tightening his muscles just in time to prevent a slight weaving of his body. His lips moved, as though his tongue were turning in an effort to disseminate a gradual gathering of thickness.

"He's going to yell before I get through with him. These babies ain't broke till they yell."

The man outside chewed for a moment at his cigar.

"Why don't you ask him to fly an airplane, or build a house?" came sarcastically. "How can he yell when he ain't got anything to yell with?"

"That's the bunk. He can yell all right—if he gets hurt bad enough. Or gets enough excited. I ought to know, oughtn't I?" he asked with a sudden lurching toward the bars. "I paid the vet bills when he got this way—I saw 'em when they sewed him up!"

The listener glanced within, toward a long, reddish gray scar which showed on the under side of the black beast's neck. He champed again at his cigar.

"The vet said he could make noises, eh?"

"Of course. There's part of his cords left—only they're part paralyzed. If he wants to, he can yell. But he won't do it, because his spirit ain't broke. That's the whole thing with him—he's just a bad actor. Just one of these tough babies that thinks he can get away with it! So I've made up my mind to a showdown—"

He swung the whip again. But the owner jerked it into inaction by a commanding nod.

"Just a minute there, Cap. You've beat that cat enough."

"Oh, I don't know. He's my cat."

"Admitting all that. But you're my employee."

"There's nothing in my contract that says I can't beat him."

"Praps not."

"And I'd like to know," Cap Sleith turned angrily, hands on his hips, "how I'm going to handle him—get back there, you! Hear me, get back there!" He had whirled and swung the whip in a vicious lashing. Then, angrily: "There you are! Not beat him, eh? And him waiting every minute to get me! Do you want me to serve myself on a platter?"

Jim Thomas, owner of the Great Amalgamated, moved a hand in a gesture of disgust.

"Nope," came finally. "All I want you to do is to take that jaguar and get off this show. We can get along fine without you. The usual notice on this trick is two weeks. That puts you off the twenty-first. I just thought I'd tell you about it."

"Two weeks?" The man, still watching his hateful charge, moved closer to the bars. "Why—why, you can't can me! I ain't done anything to be canned for. I've lived up to my contract—"

"Yep, and you've busted it, too." Thomas glanced quietly upward. "How much moon have you shoved inside yourself today, Cap?"

"Me? Why—I haven't had a drink since I've been on this show!"

"No? Mind stepping out to a breath smelling bee?"

"What'd be the use? There's nothing on me. I've got to work this cat—whoever's told you—" he said it as with outraged anger—"that I've been drinking!"

Jim Thomas smiled again.

"Oh, the hippopotamus, or the giraffe—or something. Didn't keep much track. If you want to scrap about it, just hop to it, kid. But," and he turned away, "you can just keep it in your bonnet that when Jim Thomas says a thing, he's got the dope. So that's done. You're closed—the twenty-first, and if you want to step off sooner, I'll get out the band to take you down to the station!"

Then he walked on, while Cap Sleith stared after him, hatred in his black eyes, finally to turn again to the slinking beast in the corner.

"You did that!" he muttered. "Making me beat you—now you're going to get a real one! You're—!"

But even as he raised the whip, he halted.

"That was just the bull," came thoughtfully. "He hasn't got anything on me—just pulled that for a stall. Knows the only way he can bust my contract is through that clause. He hasn't got—unless—"

Suddenly forgetful of the snaky beast, he backed to the cage entrance, barred the door behind him and hurried for the circus train, leaving in sullen peace at last a great black thing, which watched and waited for a long time before ever the tensity of his claws loosed. Then silent, hulking, suffering, mute, he turned to the licking of his wounds.

Time was when his name had been Nig—but that had been before Cap Sleith had taken him to Old Mexico. Then he had been only a mistreated trained animal, with a great deal of his instinctive viciousness undeveloped—merely a tremendous, weird appearing, snarling black jaguar, huge of head and of shoulder, with the strength of the tiger and the natural virulence that only a swamp beast, capable of conquering even the armored alligator or writhing constrictor, can know. But when he was Nig, little of this viperish quality had come to the surface; he had been captured in babyhood and reared in the subjection to which any beast unfortunate enough to fall into the hands of Cap Sleith inevitably was condemned. He had not known his power; his cunning had remained undeveloped. Then Cap had taken him to Old Mexico.

There a more lucrative business than the mere exhibition of a trained animal had beckoned. Nig—with Cap Sleith taking the rentals—had gone into a new career that of appearing twice each week in the bull ring, to slink and crawl and crouch and spring in a death battle against a snorting bull, taking the place of picador and matador while the crowd yelled its approval and while Cap Sleith sat high on the guard fence, biting his nails and gambling that his beast would win.

And Nig had held true to instinct. Day after day he had grown more vicious, more deadly. Fight after fight he had entered, to circle the arena like some tremendous, unearthly thing of darkness, slinking on the scent, to veer and dart in front of the maddened bull, to evade its thrusting horns—then to leap in the frenzy of the kill stroke, his heavy shoulders bunched as he went with lightning speed to the back of his victim, there to send his tremendous teeth deep to the vertebrae of his opponent, and by one terrible wrench break the neck of the strugging beast. But one day Nig had misjudged.

That night a trembling, frightened Cap Sleith had helped to hold the stretch ropes with which the beast had been bound, that his tremendous claws might not be used against the veterinary who sought to aid him. That night, too, Cap Sleith had wiped again and again at a dripping forehead—and resolved that if his great cat lived, he would not risk him again in a thing where even the proceeds were a gamble and where his means of livelihood endangered itself at every performance. Long hours. Gruelling hours. Then the veterinary had looked up with hope—and with an announcement.

Nig would live, he had said. The horns of the bull had penetrated only far enough to tear and paralyze the vocal cords, precluding other than silence on the part of the creature; Cap's gamble had cost him one of the selling points of a trained animal; the ability to roar and bellow, to create through its throaty rebellion an audible picture of its fierceness.

"Unless, of course," the veterinary had remarked, "something excites it terribly—so much that it unconsciously assumes control of those muscles again. Otherwise—silence."

And silence it had been, silence through the four years which had intervened, years in which Cap Sleith had beaten it and railed at it, and in which he had moved from show to show, his contracts eagerly accepted by men desirous of an unusual trained animal act, as eagerly canceled on the first opportunity following Cap's arrival, with his drunkenness, his cursings and his beatings of the silent, hateful thing which lay and suffered beneath the blows, but which gave no cry.

In that time they had ceased to know him as Nig. Circus men are descriptive by nature; the great black animal had become Dummy, and Dummy he was to all the show world—silent against Cap Sleith's every effort, and all the more hateful because there was no voice to give vent to the venom which seethed within him.

And now, free at last to lick his wounds, he lay hunched in a corner of the cage, his yellow eyes searching the menagerie, watching—as they always watched; a cat of the leopard or jaguar stripe knows how to wait for his opportunity.

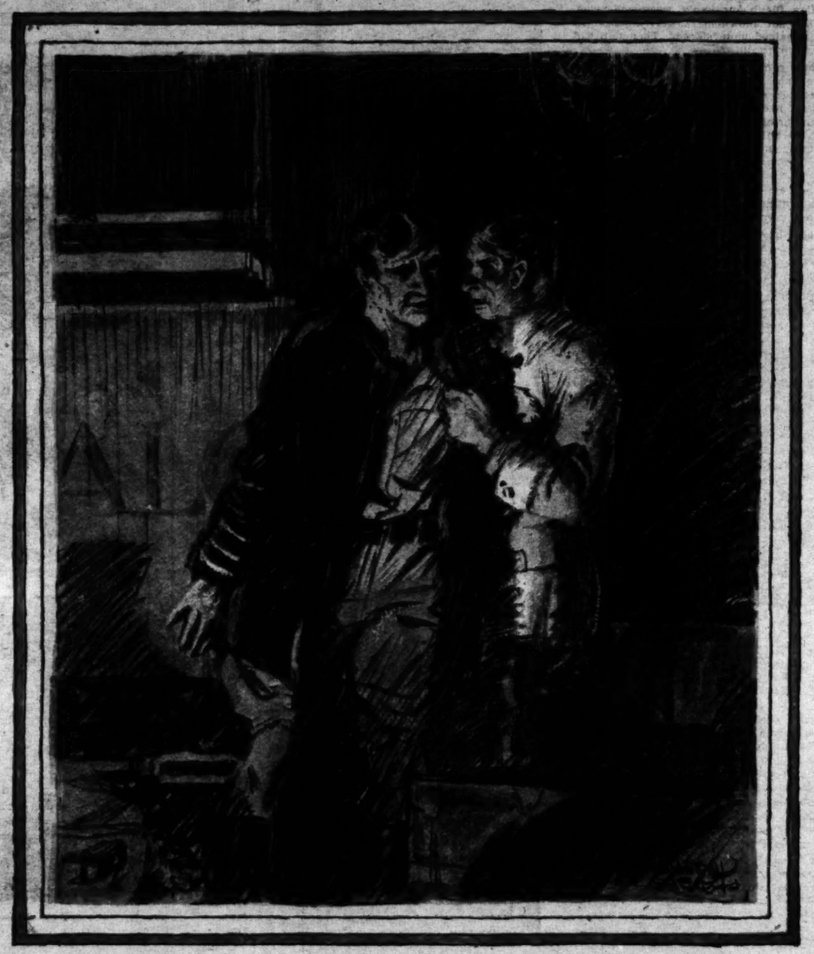
But Cap Sleith was far away, down at the railroad cars, spotted on the side tracks until the switch engines should begin their puffing task of the afternoon, as they made up the trains for the loading activities of the night. Car after car he passed quietly, nonchalantly, at last to halt, to peer within, then to whistle quietly in signal. A man came forth, the car guardian, or porter, glanced hastily about, then dropped beside him. Cap waited for no greeting.

"Well, you turned me. Eh, Jake?"

"Me?" The car porter looked up, suddenly pale. "Turned you, how do you mean?"

"Cut the comedy. You know what I'm talking about. Tipped off the old man about my booze."

"Me? Why—does he know?"



"Listen—down there on the flats. It's dark there. In the Number Forty-nine cage. Nobody ever find us there."

"What do you suppose I'd be kicking about, if he didn't know? He just closed me for it—that's all. Somebody's tipped him."

"I didn't. Honest! Why should I—ain't I been the one that's been getting the stuff for you? Won't I be in just as bad if he finds it out? You didn't tell him?"

"Do I look like a stool pigeon?"

"You won't, will you? I just did it for you, Cap. You know that. Hell, I can't lose my job now. I'm needing money too much. I'd go nuts if they ever canned me—I never would have dealt that junk for you if I hadn't been so up against it." His eyes suddenly narrowed. "The old man better not can me; I ain't in a position to stand it. It'd just drive me nutty enough to wreck this damn trick of his if he ever pulled a thing like that. I—"

"Who tipped me off, Jake?"

"I don't know. Honest. Unless the old man—"

"Has he been snooping again?"

"I saw him go through the cars this morning."

Cap Sleith turned for the sleeper steps. A moment more and he was within the car, to reach his bunk and search hastily there. He straightened.

"Had a hunch, I guess. Went through my berth. I had a bottle—half full. Got it, I guess."

Jake, the car porter, followed him to the door.

"You won't tip him off, about me? I'm hard up. I couldn't stand to get stepped off—"

"I told you once I wasn't a stool. Ain't that enough? Here." He reached into a pocket. "Get me another."

But the porter shook his head.

"Nix. Nothing doing. Can't stand to take the chances."

Cap Sleith sneered. Then with a shrug of his shoulders, he returned to the circus lot to re-enter the cage of his giant cat, there to throw into the sting of his lash every atom of his viciousness.

"Yell!" he shouted as he swung the whip again and again. "You yell—hear me? You yell! If you'd gotten back that voice of yours you'd have saved me all this. It's your d-mn stubbornness!"

"Cap!" again it was Jim Thomas standing beside the cage. Sleith glared.

"Oh, back, huh? What is it this time?"

"Stop beating that jaguar."

"Who's going to make me? There ain't anything about that in our contract—since you're running so tight to rules."

"No, I know there ain't; sorry to say." Jim Thomas rubbed his chin. "But there's a lot in the law. I've just about got to the end of my rope with you, Cap. Either you cut it, or I let out a yelp."

"Oh, the cops?" Sleith shrugged his shoulders. "Go back and read your contract. See if there ain't a clause in there that I asked you to put in—that in case of a pinch you'd look after my fine."

Jim Thomas scowled, and came closer.

"You know what that was put in for?"

"Sure—so fanatics wouldn't be causing me trouble all the time. But we've gotten right down to rock bottom now. You're enforcing that booze clause. I'll enforce the other. If it'll give you any pleasure, just trot yourself out and get a flock of cops and have me pinched. You'll only have to get me out again."

Then while the thwarted Jim Thomas walked away, Cap Sleith swung the whip and cursed, cursed and swung the whip until his arms were tired. Then he went uptown in search of another bottle.

Thus the last days of his contract with the Great Amalgamated began, thus they continued—the same flailings, the same suffering, silent, resentful thing, crouched in its corner, digging its claws into the hard wood; the same command echoing day after day:

"You'll yell before I get through with you! Hear me? You'll yell—you'll yell—!"

But only the tongue hanging over discolored fangs. Only the wide open mouth, the gasping.

Twelve days passed. Thirteen. Two weeks. And with afternoon, a suddenly different Captain Sleith moved apologetically toward the big form of Jim Thomas, just emerging from the marquee.

"Boss" the tones were studiously polite—"I wish you'd think over that little matter."

"What's there to think about?"

"Why—you know. My time's up tonight."

Jim Thomas shifted his cigar.

"That's a matter for celebration, not thinking."

"But wouldn't there be any way that—" he scraped a foot in the dust of the circus lot—"we could sort of get together? Maybe I've been wrong about this—"

"There ain't no maybe to it."

"But if I'd swear off—"

"That's about the best thing you do."

"And give you my word—?"

"Your what?" Jim Thomas said it with ill-concealed sarcasm.

"My word—my absolute word—that I'd lay off that cat—"

"The next thing I know you'll be trying to tell me that fish eat hay. Where do you get that bunk?"

Then suddenly he veered. "What's it all about, Cap?"

"Oh, I've just been thinking it over."

"Lay off that. Come clean. What's the racket?"

"Just this—" Sudden desperation had come into Cap Sleith's voice, a harassed manner of his actions. "I'm up against it, boss. If you could just let me hang on to the end of the season—anything you say'll be kayo with me. I'll treat that cat any way you want me to. It's only a matter of eight or ten weeks—I've been spending my kale pretty free this year and now I'm hooked. If you'll—"

"Got a letter this morning, didn't you?"

"Yes—that's it, from Ike Goldfield. You know—he lent me some jack this spring; with the cat there as security. I—well, I haven't been able to pay him. Now he's closing in—"

"And if you don't pay, he takes the cat?"

"That's it. Then where'd I be?"

Jim Thomas merely stood and laughed for a moment. Then:

"Where you ought to be," he said, and turned his back. Nor did he pause to notice, as he went again under the marquee, that Cap Sleith still stood there, his heavily knit brows pulled together until they seemed to touch, his heavy hands twitching nervously at his sides, his shoulders hunched—as he hunched them before he began his daily assault upon the silent black form in the gilded cage. But in a moment more he had whirled, to cross the circus lot, to move hastily through the glaring railroad yards, then to whistle at the door of a sleeper. The porter came forth, glancing over his shoulder as he did so. Cap's voice became pleading.

"Listen, Jake—just this one time—I won't bother you again—"

"What do you want? Booze?" The man asked it directly, and without a lowering of his tones.

"Yes. If you could just help me out—"

"Can't do it myself. Can't leave here. Got a crap game running. But I can tell you where to get it." Then, as if in answer to the surprise on the other man's face: "I got mine this morning. The old man must've found out. He's blowed me, too."

"Oh!" Then Cap asked for the directions. A half hour later he sat in the dingy back room of what once had been a saloon—and was a saloon still. An empty glass was before him, still oily with the remains of something which passed as whisky. Cap rubbed his chin, reached for a cigaret—then tapped on the table. That night the black jaguar crouched in its cage unbeaten. Cap had not appeared for his last performance.

Instead, he still sat in that dingy little back room, watching with bleared eyes, the forms which came and went, the narrow shouldered lookout in the doorway, the heavy figure of the bartender as he surveyed the applicants who moved through the swinging doors, serving them or refusing them, according to their credentials. Ten o'clock came. Eleven. Cap Sleith tapped on the table again—as he had tapped at intervals since early afternoon. Then when the bulky form approached he waved a hand in drunken cordiality.

"Have one y'self."

"N'thanks. On duty, y'know."

"Oh." Cap Sleith grinned. "Don't blame y'. Awful stuff. But I got a ri' to drink it—my duty's over. Go' canned t'day. Dirties' deal a fel' ever had. Jus' 'tween you'n me, a fel'd give another guy a deal li' that, ought to have something hap' t' him. Strai' goods. Fel' pull a deal li' that ought have—"

He halted suddenly. A circus wagon, its peculiar truckling sound echoing even into the dingy back room had just passed, bound for the loading runs. The train was getting ready to leave. Tomorrow he would not be with it? Tomorrow—!

He smiled—as he often smiled, just before he laid the lash to the quivering back of the silent Dummy. A fellow that'd pull a deal like that! He wouldn't pull it again—not after tomorrow. And no one to prove who had done it! The nights were cold now—there would be no canvasmen sleeping on the flat cars; the watchman would be loafing in the warmth of the caboose—with Jake to help him and keep watch for him, it would be a matter of minutes! He ordered another drink, paid for it and gulped it hastily. Then weaving, his eyes dull and bleared, yet with a certain gleaming showing deep within them, he rose and moved uncertainly from the dingy room.

A half hour later he skirted the circle of light where the train boss labored at the task of loading, edged along in the shadows of the stock cars, then, still in the darkness, halted and whistled. A white-clad form turned from the platform of a sleeping car. A moment more and they were together. Cap Sleith caught at the other man's coat.

"Listen!" he began. "I've got somethin' on m' pin'. Got t' see you alone abou' it. Wan' y' t' help me. Game?"

"For what?" Jake had moved closer. "Take it easy—you're talking loud. If it's anything that'll slash the old man—"

"Slash him?" Cap Sleith chuckled. "Slash him? What y' s'pose I'm thinkin' abou'? Giv'n 'im money? Slash him? Say, listen! After he gets through payin' th' damage suits f'r th' people that're chewed up—eh, ge' me? Panic cos' money, eh? Ge' me? When th' an'mals go out—huh?"

"Nix! Nix!" Jake turned as with sudden fear. A flashing thought had come into his mind—a chance to get back! To square himself! To find Jim Thomas, to station him where he could hear it all, to appeal to him on the grounds that he had proved faithful in time of danger—suddenly he caught at the weaving shoulder of the animal trainer. "Nix on that stuff here!" he commanded. "You're talking loud—want to spill everything?"

"Bu' are y' on? That's wha' I wan' know? Are y' on?"

"Of course, I'm on. But we can't frame it here. We've got to duck some place—where we can talk it over. Listen—down there on the flats. It's dark there. In the number Forty-nine cage. Nobody ever find us there. They ain't put anything in it since Duke died, have they?"

"No. Still empty. Where's it at?"

"Fourth cage from the other end. They loaded it early with those three busted dens that they're going to ship back to quarters. Go on down—I'll follow you up as soon as I can duck into the cars and change my clothes. They'd see me in this white jacket. You can't miss it."

"That's ri'. Goo' idea. Nobody ever see us."

Then he turned, and a weaving, unsteady thing in the shadows moved down the line of flats, far to the other end of the train, there to clamber aboard, and halt in speculation.

A cage loomed before him, and he went to it—one of the dens, which filled with junk and broken properties, stood shrouded and useless until the circus should reach a convenient shipping place, that it might be returned to winter quarters. Cap Sleith moved toward it, and stood for a moment, toying with the bar of the door. Yes, his idea was correct. The efforts of the night would not show beneath the covering of canvas. There would be no way of telling, as the wagons were unloaded in the morning, that every safety bar had been loosened, and caught by baling wire to the end boards in such a way that the hurried removal of the first

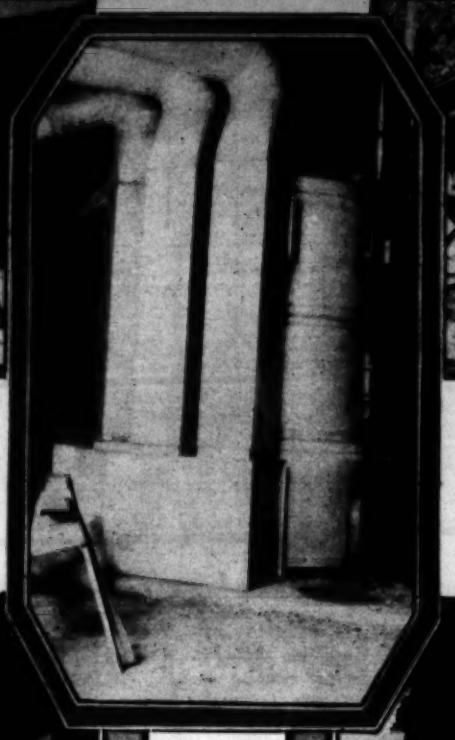
Dehydration Cuts Labor Cost and Risk of Sun-Drying

Improved methods of handling the crop are much in evidence in the Southland's walnut districts, where many walnut dehydrators, ranging in capacity from one to six or more tons, are now in operation. Four of the photographs in this group, taken on the ranch of a Puente grower, W. H. Powell, illustrate the process followed. This picture shows nuts being unloaded at dehydrating plant.



The hulled nuts are washed in this revolving drum and then taken on an endless-chain belt to a height from which they can roll down a trough into bins. Here the dehydration takes place, warm air from a fan-equipped furnace being forced into the bottom of the bin and passing up through a ton or more of nuts at a time. In oval—This six-pipe furnace takes care of six bins at once.

After the nuts have been given the warm air treatment for twenty-four hours they are run out of the bins onto an endless canvas belt from which they may be diverted into sacks. A skilled worker sorts out cracked or spoiled nuts and drops them over a little partition for further handling. The little slide openings of the bins may be seen in the photograph.

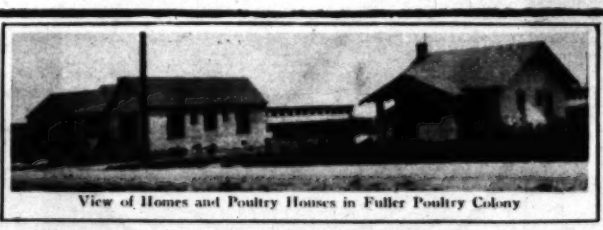
The saving of time and labor over the old method of tray-drying in the sun, together with the elimination of risk from rain or fog under that plan, has led many growers to purchase dehydrators. Here is a type of dehydrator shown at the recent Walnut Field Day at Chino. Many owners of dehydrators have been doing custom work for other growers not so equipped.

Fuller Poultry Colony

A Colony of Distinction

HOMES

There are no small, unsightly shacks serving as residences on the Fuller Colony. It is a Colony of high class people and first-class homes.



View of Homes and Poultry Houses in Fuller Poultry Colony

POULTRY HOUSES

The Copyrighted Fuller-type poultry house excels in low cost of housing, ventilation, sanitation and ease of care. Cannot be duplicated except in Fuller Poultry Colony.

WHAT IT MEANS TO YOU TO OWN AN ACRE FARM IN THE FULLER POULTRY COLONY

(1) You can have an income of from $2,000 to $4,000 a year, and up, better than 50% profit on your investment.

(2) No previous experience necessary. Under the Fuller method the beginner is at once an expert poultryman.

(3) An expert in the industry at your command at all times. Free instruction in the business.

(4) You have the advantages of cooperative buying and marketing which alone will increase your net profit more than 50c. a hen, per year.

(5) The Fuller Poultry Colony is located in the most fertile section of the San Fernando Valley, yet is within the City Limits of Los Angeles and affords all city conveniences—water, lights, telephone, mail delivery and school buses. You are really living in the city with all the freedom and advantages of the country.

(6) The Fuller Poultry Colony is unsurpassed from standpoint of climate and general living conditions. The land slopes gently to the south. The view is beautiful and inspiring. 1,000 feet, high enough to be dry, yet so situated as to receive a refreshing ocean breeze.

(7) The Fuller method of poultry raising is placed upon a thoroughly sound and stable basis. The demand of the egg market is constantly increasing.

(8) Many business and professional people are locating in the Fuller Poultry Colony. You can easily locate in this Colony, succeed in the poultry business and still be actively engaged in other business or professional practice.

A FULLER ACRE HOME COMPRISES

A One Acre Farm of San Fernando Valley's most fertile soil; four-room modern bungalow, including two bedrooms, bath, breakfast nook, built-in cooler, cupboards, laundry tray, buffet, etc.; poultry house, 20 x 120 feet, including garage and feed house, capacity for 1,000 laying hens and all necessary equipment; 2,000 baby chicks, best White Leghorn stock; four brooders, feed chopper, lawn sprinkler, hose, tools, etc.; feed for one month, and all necessary green feed planted.

Four-room modern bungalow and poultry house—the latter fully equipped. Sold on easy terms.

LIMITED TIME SPECIAL OFFER

For a limited time the Fuller Poultry Colony will finance anyone on a fully equipped poultry farm—all on easy terms. After you have made the first payment, the business will pay the balance. This is positively the most liberal financing plan that has ever been offered.

Unimproved acre farms may also be purchased for cash or on terms. An acre in the rapidly growing Fuller Colony is a worth-while investment.

TO REACH FULLER POULTRY COLONY: Go to San Fernando, past San Fernando Mission to Chatsworth Blvd., west on Chatsworth Blvd. and follow signs to tract. Visit our colony, call at our most convenient office, or write Fuller Poultry Colony, P. O. Box 316, San Fernando, Calif.

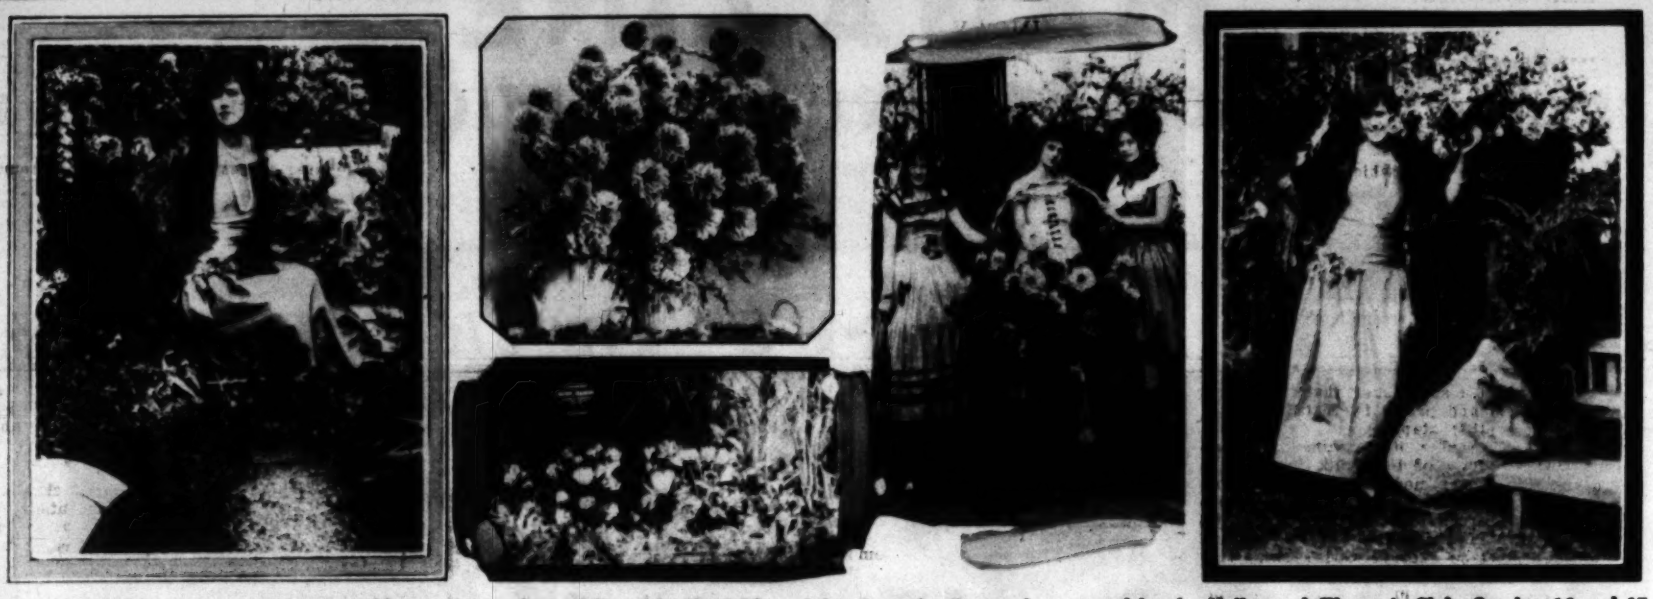
The Garden Beautiful in Southern California

INFORMATION BOTH PRACTICAL AND SCIENTIFIC. BY ERNEST BRAUNTON



Some of the season's most gorgeous blossoms were beautifully and effectively exhibited at the flower show staged by the Hollywood Women's Club, October 16 and 17

NOW is a good time to begin to put in lawns or to renovate old ones. The ground should first be graded and you should keep in mind the fact that the surface can never be more smooth and even than it is when you get through with grading. The soil must be well pulverized and thoroughly soaked. If light and sandy, it will pay to haul in some adobe or heavy soil to put on the surface. No soil grows grass better than adobe. If the soil is very light, it would be better not to use blue grass or clover, but to depend upon lippia or some other soil cover.

Good stable manure is the best material one can put in the soil for fertilizer and do not let any one deter you from using it if it is available. If you don't have it, use commercial lawn fertilizer at the rate of fifty pounds to 1,000 square feet. A heavy raking to mix this with the top soil should be sufficient. The amount of seed needed is not less than six pounds to 1,000 square feet. Some use one-third clover and two-thirds blue grass and this makes a fine combination. The two should be sown separately as one is heavy and the other is very light. Sow both very evenly over the whole surface.

After sowing rake the soil over lightly to cover the seeds. Better rake it over twice, the second raking crossways to the first, but do not pull the soil about so that any of the seed is deeply covered or any moved about after sowing evenly. If possible, roll the surface after sowing. Then water with a fine spray until the ground is thoroughly wetted and afterward gently spray the surface at any time of day the least dryness shows and keep this up until the grass is in evidence. Get good seed; do not hunt for a place where it is sold at a lesser price than elsewhere. As a rule, you will get what you pay for.

Plant Verbenas Now

Verbenas are splendid bedders and one may get strong vivid colors that will brighten any garden or landscape. The range of color, too, is great, but there are none better than the scarlets, and none flower more freely. Some very fine effects may be had with mixed colors, for though they come in great variety it is seldom that a jarring or conflicting shade appears, and even so, the offender may be plucked thence and cast in the uttermost depths of the trash heap. After one has a small stock of mixed verbenas he may propagate from cuttings of the colors he admires and throw the others away. They grow so easily from cuttings that a small child may soon increase the stock to enough to fill a garden.

Hanging Baskets

Hanging baskets are of wire-work, earthenware, or wood and have wires or small chains attached for suspending them. Regardless of the material used, there should be holes in the bottom for drainage. In preparing the basket, especially one made of wire, a layer of moss one inch deep should be spread over the bottom and sides of the basket to hold the soil and prevent water from washing through. Ordinary potting soil consisting of one-half garden loam, one-fourth rotted manure and one-fourth sand is used to fill the baskets. For the center of the basket, rather low, compact growing plants are preferable. Around the edge are placed plants of a drooping or trailing habit to hang over the sides. To water the basket it may be dipped in a tub or basin until thoroughly soaked or it may be sprinkled with a watering pot in the usual way. If a layer of moss is placed over the surface between the plants, less water will be required and the basket will present a neater appearance. In dry weather the basket will need to be watered well every day. In order to have the plants bloom freely, the basket should be hung where it will be exposed to the sun for two or three hours each day.

Useful Gardens

Gardens are not wholly for appearances. Some part of every one should be for use; for growing something useful or for experimental work. A garden merely for show reminds me of what Dr. L. H. Bailey said of model farms: "I would rather have ten acres of land to use when I want it and as I want it than to have any number of acres to look at and admire."

Neighborhood Parks Needed

Los Angeles, and all other cities for that matter, need more small neighborhood parks. The masses must have breathing spaces and small parks or squares best meet these requirements. The development of cities should be controlled by the municipalities, and no tract put on the market except a small area for a park is first donated to the city. This is a justifiable "holdup." There should be a neighborhood park within ten minutes' brisk walk of every home in Los Angeles. All should have an educational value for the district school and general public, therefore each tree or shrub should be labeled with proper and scientific name and country of nativity.

The Home Grounds

The home grounds mean a great deal more than most of us think. Only a very few persons may come into the home, while many pass and see the yard and buildings. The occupants of the home are judged very largely by the environ of the home. Strangers may reasonably expect to find neat homes, adorned and hedged in by trees, shrubs and flowers. And nothing reduces our standing as estimated by strangers more than bleak, treeless, flowerless homes. The value of trees, shrubs and flowers when homes are offered for sale is well known, yet few of us place high enough value on these while we live on the place. If trees and ornamental grounds are so essential when the home is to be sold, why are they not valuable while it is retained as a home? The veteran trees that shade our homes stand as monuments to those who planted them.

Curious Plants

When a child I used to wonder at several things in plant life that seemed oddly out of place. One was that peanuts grew underground. The impression of nuts growing on trees, as nearly all do, or of the hazel bush with its burs full of nuts could hardly allow for nuts under the soil. Nor was I any more satisfied when told they were not closely related to any other nuts, but were true pods with beans or peas inside, for no beans or peas are known that do not grow on bush or vine. Before being able to easily tell the difference between wool and cotton I had seen tens of thousands of sheep and gained the impression that cotton also must be shorn from some hairy animal not far from cat or dog in appearance. Therefore I was astounded at the sight of a cotton plant at maturity, covered with balls of white down that I was assured was real cotton. After handling the substance my mind at once turned to the downy softness of cotton flannel. One more puzzle there was—the sweet potato. I was very familiar with the common potato, as I was with morning glory vines and flowers, but saw no sweet potato plants until a large boy. Then I was quite astonished to find that sweet potatoes were the roots of morning glory plants. All the three things mentioned have never become quite adjusted yet. I am wondering if we do not owe it to our children to acquaint them with these facts and grow plants of each of these things in our gardens that the little ones may see and learn. All the plants in question are natives of the Americas.

Wallflowers Becoming Popular

Wallflowers thrive best in the cold weather and therefore seeds or plants should be put in the soil now. We have American strains now that do not need the cool damp climate of England to bring them up to perfect flowers, and these newer strains will please Californians. The flowers have a delightful fragrance and the colors are rather unusual in the gardens, the blood-reds and browns, as well as the yellows tinged with brown, being very attractive. Plant in cool spots.

Safeguarding a Big City's Milk Supply

How a Clean, Wholesome Product Is Assured for the Million Consumers of Los Angeles—Fifty Thousand Cows Contribute to Supply —Per Capita Consumption Is Increasing

OF ALL the foods which serve and support mankind probably the most vital and important is milk. Milk contains all of the elements making for growth and life maintenance, as well as those mysterious disease-resistant qualities called vitamines. It is the first food to enter the body of the baby, and the old prolong their lives and vigor by its use.

Milk is an appreciated food, and when the supply is diminished its loss is felt more keenly than that of any other food. The demand for it is so constant that the market is sustained and prices fluctuate less than with most other staples.

Perhaps because it contains so many needed elements of life, milk furnishes a particularly good medium for the development of disease bacteria. Its fluid nature provides a carrier for filth and dirt, and its color furnishes a mask. Therefore sources of milk must be guarded with greater vigilance than those of any other form of food. As people multiply in any great city, this guard must be increased, organized and systematized.

One of the first questions a mother asks on arrival in a new city is: "Where can I get good, clean milk?" It is a question everybody has the right to ask. Los Angeles with a population of over a million requires an enormous bulk of milk and cream every day. The State law places the supervision of milk sold within the city of Los Angeles, regardless of where it may originate, under the control of the council. This body has in the past enacted an ordinance which very properly delegates this authority to the health commissioner. To watch over the production and marketing of all milk calls for considerable machinery in the form of a corps of inspectors.

Dr. George Parrish is the city health commissioner, and Dr. William Veit city veterinarian and chief of the milk inspection forces in the West's largest city. Under him at present are eleven other men, trained for the work they do. They have certain police powers, and the ordinance requires that anyone who sells milk or cream within the city limits must first secure a permit from the departments. When the rules and regulations of the ordinance are not maintained by any milk source, the permit may be revoked and the owner prosecuted. These powers have been invoked again and again, but while the sources of milk are farther and farther afield and are ever being enlarged with the increase in population, the prosecutions lessen as the education of the producers proceeds.

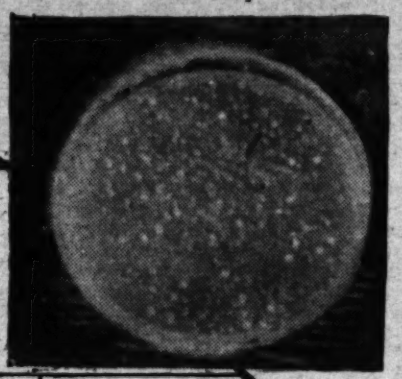
MILK BY THE TON

Doctor Veit estimates that the consumption of milk in Los Angeles is slightly over a pint a day per capita. It is not difficult to visualize one pint of milk, but when it comes to a million, the amount is hard to grasp. As much fluid flows from the cows that supply Los Angeles with milk as gushes from a 3000-barrel oil well each day. The milk that the people of Los Angeles drink every twenty-four hours weighs 500 tons.

To produce this great quantity of milk the product from 1454 dairies and 49,139 cows is utilized. These dairies are situated in a great irregular circle about the city, some of them as much as 170 miles away. The cream is supplied by 817 dairies milking 26,961 cows and comes from as far north as Fresno county. The dairies serving Los Angeles are found in twelve different California counties— Los Angeles, Orange, San Diego, Riverside, San Bernardino, Ventura, Santa Barbara, San Luis Obispo, Kern, Kings, Tulare and Fresno.

Outside the city proper the dairy sources of the city are divided into districts. One of these embraces thirty-seven dairies, another, seventy-one dairies; still another 162, all in Los Angeles county. A district taking in much of Santa Barbara and Ventura counties includes 132 dairies; one embracing Riverside county, 404 dairies, one for Orange county, 421, and so on. Some of these districts include parts of two or more counties, so it would be difficult to give their boundaries. In the city itself there are 270 dairies, 34 milk plants, 30 ice cream plants, four cheese factories and one cottage cheese factory, all under inspection.

There are a dozen inspectors at work in the dairies which supply Los Angeles with its daily milk bottle. These men report that they find in general a desire to co-operate with them on the part of the dairymen.



Where the Dairies Are.

The dotted lines show the sources of Los Angeles' milk and cream by counties. Inset: Bacteria cultures as developed in the chemical laboratory of the city's health department from a sample of milk.

GRADED BY QUALITY

The milk is sold under certain classes as follows: (1) Certified; (2) guaranteed; (3) grade A raw; (4) grade A pasteurized, and (5) canned or grade B. Certified milk is raw milk produced under the auspices of the Los Angeles Medical Society and the bacteria limit of which must not exceed 10,000 cubic centimeters. Guaranteed milk is a raw product with the bacteria limit under 25,000 per c.c. Grade A raw comes from tuberculin-tested cows, with a bacteria limit under 100,000 per c. c. Goat milk requirements are the same as for Grade A. raw. Grade A pasteurized is milk heated to a temperature of 142 degrees F., held there for thirty minutes and then cooled rapidly to 50 degrees, with a bacteria limit of less than 200,000 before heating and 15,000 after heating. Milk contests are held frequently and grades given to the competing dairies. The high standard of milk supplied to Los Angeles is indicated by the fact that the contest conducted by the State Bureau of Dairy Control at Sacramento awarded this city a score of 96.1 in January, the highest rating ever given any local milk inspection department in California.

A staggering amount of capital is tied up in the dairying business which supplies Los Angeles folks with their pint per day apiece. There is an estimated investment of $5,000,000 in distributing plants; $24,700,000 in dairy lands and buildings, and $8,000,000 in the cattle themselves. Over 5000 employees are needed for the distribution of the milk alone.

Statistics indicate that the per capita consumption of milk in Los Angeles is increasing. In 1900 the city, with a population of 102,479 consumed 7-20 of a pint apiece—about a third of a pint. In that year 2500 cows were enough to furnish the milk.

NEW SOURCES NEEDED

The department has found that the demand for milk is growing steadily, and probably the coming ten years will see not only much more milk used in Los Angeles, but more per capita. Because of this they are looking for new sources of supply. The day is coming and coming rapidly apparently when the available land immediately around the city will be subdivided and when the milk now produced near by must come from afar. The inspectors believe that this and necessary added supplies will have to come from Imperial and San Joaquin Valleys in increasing quantities. A special effort is being made to prepare the dairymen there

Subtropical Exhibits a Revelation to Orange County Fair Visitors

SANTA ANA.—That Orange county is well adapted to subtropical fruits and that these are in some instances grown in surprising profusion within its boundaries was revealed to many visitors to the recent Orange County Fair here. In the main agricultural tent at the fair was a display of some thirty different varieties of fruits, hailing from the oriental and Mediterranean countries and from South America. The exhibit was arranged by the Farm Adviser and included fine specimens of the papaya, cherimoya, Kei apple, jujube, sapota, carob, roselle and feijo, which are native to practically all the tropical sections of the earth as well as the more common fruits, such as pomegranates, figs, persimmons and avocados, grown in abundance in Orange and other Southern California counties.

Young papaya and cherimoya trees were displayed by George W. Beck and Sons, La Habra. The papaya is a native of Mexico, where it is used for breakfast food. The tree grows to a height of twenty-five feet under normal environment and the fruit grows from six to twenty inches in length. The cherimoya, a native of Peru, and commonly called the custard apple, was shown by J. C. Launer, La Habra, and Albert Wilson, Yorba Linda. This delicious fruit is used as a dessert.

The Kei apple, a native of South Africa, attracted much attention. This fruit is edible and is used for making jellies. It is a shrub and was brought to California by the late Newton Pierce, Santa Ana. The shrub, together with a great number of other rare tropical plants, is being grown by Mrs. Newton Pierce at Santa Ana.

The Giant lemon, Rough lemon and the Chinese bush lemon were of particular interest. The bush lemon, a recent introduction by the Bureau of Plant Industry, was shown by George W. Beck, La Habra Heights. The fruit has a smooth, kid-glove skin and is very attractive in color. It may prove very valuable where dwarf bush lemons are desired.

The kumquat, of the Nagami variety, which may be eaten either fresh or preserved, was on display from the ranch of A. F. Manz, La Habra and Albert Wilson, Yorba Linda. The Tuna fruit, otherwise known as cactus apple or prickly pear, and which abounds in the Southland, was on display. The fruit, according to C. P. Taft, horticulturist of Orange, makes an excellent dessert and has great possibilities.

The passion fruit, a native of Brazil, is grown profusely in Australia. More than 3,000,000 pounds of the fruit are produced annually on the island continent. The fruit is used for jams, jellies, preserves, ices and drinks. B. H. Sharpless, Tustin, and E. E. Knight, Yorba Linda, have luxuriant vines bearing this fruit, and contributed to the fair display. The vine is a perennial and does well in Southern California.

The plate display of jujubes, including the budded and the seedling varieties, were of general interest. The jujube is one of the five principal fruits of China and one of the important introductions of the United States Department of Agriculture. The Plant Introduction Gardens at Chico are improving the foreign varieties and a considerable acreage has been planted in California.

A seedling date grown by Ray Billingsley, Villa Park, has borne ripe fruit for a number of years and some of this was on exhibition. Some thirty-eight years ago Mr. Billingsley planted some seeds from fruit

Gibson, one of the foremost rabbit judges of the State discussed the care and feeding of rabbits, urging plenty of green feed.

When the organization was formed last summer, prizes were offered those who would secure the largest number of new members. The first prize, a trio of Flemish Giants, was awarded E. E. Eddy, Roscoe, for securing twenty-one new members. B. K. Krause was second with thirteen and received a pair of New Zealand Reds.

Ambassador Show Reds

The forthcoming Ambassador Poultry Show which will be held in Los Angeles, December 8 to 13, will bring an outstanding exhibit of Rhode Island Reds. Many handsome cups and cash specials are being offered in this division by the California Branch of the Rhode Island Red Club of America, and from present indications the competition will be keen in all classes. In addition to cups offered for best display, second best display, third best display, champion male, champion female and best cockerel in both Rose Comb and Single Comb varieties; cash specials will be given as follows: First pen, $12; second pen, $8; third pen, $6; fourth pen, $4; fifth pen, $2. In the individual classes for cock, cockerel, hen and pullet, first place will pay $6, second $4, third $3; fourth $2 and fifth $1. The California State Branch will also give ribbons for best male and female shown by novices and will pay $5 for best display by a novice. The Rhode Island Red Club of America also offers ribbons for best shape and best color in the Red division.

which the chicks snuggle to keep warm. Thermometer tests show that the right temperature is evenly maintained. Surrounding the inverted tub is a short roll of two-foot poultry netting on end, which makes a small yard for the chicks when it is warm enough for them to come out from under the hover. Taylor so far has had complete success with his brood.

POULTRY SHOW PLANS

PASADENA.—The Pasadena Poultry Association will hold its annual mid-winter poultry show January 12 to 16. In announcing the dates Secretary H. W. Adams states that this winter's show will be held under American Poultry Association rules, and will cater principally to the standard varieties. Although ribbons will be given worthy non-standard varieties, cash prizes will be given only to standard classes. First, second and third prize money will be paid in filled classes (five entries.) A. P. A. ribbons for all first second, third, fourth and fifth prize winners will be displayed on the coops, instead of substituting stickers for coops and later mailing the ribbons to the winners. The placing of the ribbons on the coops adds to the attractiveness of the show, and is a practice that should be followed, even though some of the ribbons may be lost or become soiled. Among those who will officiate as judges at the show will be W. M. Wise, San Gabriel; A. G. Goodacre, Compton, and Henry Mumford, South Pasadena. A special feature of the show will be found in one section that is to be set aside for breeding yards, each consisting of a male and eight females. A special sweepstakes prize will be given for the best yard with all standard breeds and varieties eligible for competition.

POULTRY AND DOG SHOW

DINUBA.—Arrangements are well under way for the Poultry and Dog Show to be held here November 5 to 7. The American Poultry Association will sponsor the bird show while the bench show will be under auspices of the American Kennel club. J. J. Jacobson is general chairman of the committee; Ralph Friend heads the poultry division, R. J. Kirk the bench department and Harry Hurst is secretary-treasurer.

EGG BUSINESS BRISK

TULARE.—During September, 100 more cases of eggs were handled than during the same month last year by the Tulare Poultry Association. Prices were fixed at 41 cents for No. 1 eggs, the same as in 1924.

The organization marketed above $12,000 worth of eggs and $400 worth of poultry, distributed $9000 worth of feeds and supplies, and placed nearly $1000 worth of baby chicks during the month. There is a brisk demand for eggs with a decline in feed prices. Demand for laying stock is heavy and it appears impossible to fill orders for fall baby chicks.

FUMIGATION OVER

LINDSAY.—Fumigation of citrus trees for the season in Tulare county has ended, with a total of 2750 acres treated, according to the horticultural office. This represents a material increase in acreage over last year and one of the most successful seasons on record. Growers spent more money on the work this season than for several years.

MUCH MONEY DISBURSED

OXNARD.—October 15 was a red-letter day in this district. On this day the American Beet Sugar Company paid $326,000 to its growers, the California Lima Bean Growers' Association disbursed $600,000 on the September pool, and the Ventura County Ice and Milk Company made a monthly payment of $16,250 to its producers. During the past few years beet and bean production have sagged to low levels because of a short rainfall, but dairying has increased from $123,845 in 1923 to an approximate estimated $300,000 for 1925. It is believed that dairying will have a marked beneficial effect on sugar beet production in the future. Oxnard's second annual dairy day will be held November 7.

To Study Heating

Citrus growers of Los Angeles county will have an opportunity to receive up-to-date instruction on orchard heating at a series of field meetings to be held during the first week in November by the Farm Advisor's office, co-operating with the citrus growers' department of the County Farm Bureau. Experiences of the past year have awakened greater interest in grove heating than has ever been evidenced before. In the neighborhood of 300,000 heaters have been contracted for by the California Fruit Growers' Exchange alone. Farm Advisor M. B. Rounds will have charge of the meetings, assisted by W. R. Schoonover, citrus extension specialist. Floyd D. Young, in charge of the extensive temperature studies and frost protection service of the United States Weather Bureau, will take a leading part. Following is the schedule of meetings: November 3, 10 a. m., ranch of A. P. Sullivan, southwest of Downey; November 3, 2 p. m., ranch of R. S. Carvey, one mile north of Rivera; November 4, 10 a. m., North Whittier Heights Packing House; November 4, 2 p. m., office of Covina Valley Fumigating Company, Charter Oak; November 5, 10 a. m., ranch of George T. Bettin, Glendora; November 5, 2 p. m., A. Hummel ranch, Azusa; November 6, 10 a. m., San Dimas Lemon House.

The Development of the San Gorgonio Pass Almond Industry

BY W. A. LINKLETTER

BANNING.—The Banning district is the only one in Southern California where almonds are grown on a commercial scale of any importance. A check of almond acreage made by J. R. Laddie, horticultural inspector for the San Gorgonio Pass district, indicated that there are 977 acres in the district to the acre. After maturity they require little pruning. A few suckers are cut out to shape the trees. They are given a wet spray while dormant, and another just before blossoming time, usually in February and March. A cover crop is sowed after the harvest in the summer and this is turned under in the fall, where the former was stockyard manure. Among some of the larger almond growers are C. O. Barker, who has eighty acres, Don G. Keppler with seventy acres and Mrs Ida T. Bird with forty acres. C. D. Hamilton, who is president of the California Almond Growers Exchange and of the Banning association, has twenty-eight acres. Mr. and Mrs. Hamilton are on a tour around the world and were recently heard from in Italy, where the former was studying almond production. On account of cheap land and labor in the old world, foreign-grown nuts made the industry unprofitable in these four varieties on account of inter-pollination.

Concord Grapes Crowning for Juice Making

TUSTIN.—What is believed to be the largest California Concord grape vineyard in California is in Orange county on Lemon Heights in the Tustin district. According to reports from James B. Utt, owner of the land, the yield of the vines this year will be more than 250 tons of grapes, with only one-half of the acreage in bearing. Call

EDITED BY HAROLD M. FINLEY

Communications from practical farmers, ranchers, stock raisers, poultrymen, gardeners and others engaged either in a large or small way in the vital work of food production are gladly received.

Good clear photographs of interesting farm and garden activities are always welcomed. The Los Angeles Times Farm and Orchard Magazine is the only farm journal in the West printing illustrations in the incomparable rotogravure process.

Bottle-Fed Trees

IN a recent address before a fruit growers' convention Dr. C. B. Lipman of the University of California spoke of studies in tree injection. Where elements are lacking in soils, trees may be helped by the application of these elements in the form of fertilizers. Occasionally, however, chemical compounds in the earth react on these elements and they are not available for the roots. In such instances, Dr. Lipman said, injection may be deemed legitimate.

The method he described is interesting, and apparently is useful in the case of what may be called deficiency tree diseases. Chlorosis—a yellowing of leaves—is caused apparently by a lack of iron. Iron sulphate well diluted and allowed to enter the sap directly, has cured the trouble. Similar injections most carefully applied by scientists in experimental work have given a promise of greater things perhaps.

In the middle eighties a so-called "tree doctor" appeared in the Middle West, and claimed to be able to restore fruiting and health to orchards. He bored holes in the trunks and stuffed them with a powder which he claimed was a secret compound of his own, but which looked and smelled like sulphur. He did more harm than any fruit disease that country ever had.

It is to be hoped that practical benefit will eventually come from such experiments as Dr. Lipman's. Unfortunately, however, the publication of parts of his address have swung open the door for a host of fakers who will besiege the orchardists with glib assurances of doubled yields, better fruit and healthy trees if they are allowed to feed their trees on the bottle.

Owners of fruit trees should have nothing to do with these "tree quacks." They can ruin a fine orchard that took years to grow, and they may if they have the chance. They can do no good. Tree injection may or may not become a common practice some day, but that day is in the future. If any of the tribe of smooth-tongued orchard practitioners comes to your door and assures you he has a sure-fire nostrum for injection in trees, insist on communicating with your county horticulturist or farm advisor or on writing to the university about his method before you try it. The precaution will save you dollars and trees.

Overdoing a Thing

WE HAVE learned almost to fear the story of extraordinary production and amazing returns from some unique venture or other. It isn't that the stories are questioned—we know that such things happen—but because of the almost invariable result of their publication. When an enormous yield and a tremendous financial profit are announced by some grower who has had a "hunch" to go in for some crop, a host of ill-advised but enthusiastic people follow the lead. They glut the markets and they get little in return for their efforts. The reaction is twofold: They think that the editor is a congenital liar, and they think that the crop they grew is "no good."

More than one worthy plant which might to add to the pleasure of the consumer and to contribute to the profits of growers languishes today in ill-deserved obscurity because it was damned by this foolish and illogical course.

We publish an example of this kind with some hesitation. It concerns an unexpected profit reaped from a city lot sown to roselle plants. What will be the result? Will all the people who have vacant lots in Southern California start in to raising roselle buds? If they do what will the price be? We can answer that—it will be nothing at all, for the market has not been developed. The roselle bud deserves a place in the economy of agriculture, but it won't be helped into that place if its growing is overdone at this stage of the game.

We have a high regard for the intelligence and good sense of the man whose story of remarkable returns from onions on an acre appears in this issue. He is not going to raise onions next year. He looks forward confidently to a rising wave of onion culturists who will swamp the market in his district.

Farm Living Costs

ONE of the most patent and apparent advantages which the farmer has over his brother in the city is that he gets for himself and his family much of his food, most of his fuel and his shelter without any outlay of cash. We are talking, of course, of the farmer who really tries to make his place produce part of what he himself needs. The fruits and vegetables he grows may be perfectly good but not always marketable. Some of the shells of his eggs are discolored and he uses them. There is a surplus of meat, and the growing out of farm animals enables him to raise one steer or one hog for his own use. The city man must pay cash for all his food, fuel and home and even his clothing costs more than the clothing which is proper and fitting for the farmer.

Nevertheless, it must be understood that the farm living is not obtained free of cost by the farmer and his family. It represents some cash for materials, much labor and the capital originally invested in the farm. It should properly be figured in on the gross income of the farm. It is a part of the returns from the business—not a free, natural gift.

The real advantage does not lie in getting something for nothing—no farmer or anybody else gets anything for nothing—but it is in the stability and safety which the farm gives its operator. If a man be industrious and own his place free of incumbrance you cannot starve him, his wife and children. He may not make any money, but he and his have enough to eat, enough to wear and a shelter. Once in a while a city dweller, after a long period of hard work at fair wages, discovers that he has barely done that much for himself. He has had more cash, but it has slipped away for his table, his wardrobe and his rent. He has had more amusements, and educational advantages, but on the other hand his source of income is never certain.

Avocado Men Meet

At a recent feeting of the California Avocado Growers' Exchange C. V. Newman of Tustin was elected president. Office and storage space has been enlarged at the exchange packing-house in Los Angeles. A recent survey indicates that the 1926 crop will be twice the size of that of 1925, and even now it is impossible to dispose of the bulk of the crop on the Los Angeles market, so a marketing program is being prepared. Prices received for fruit in the East have been higher than local prices, and it is believed that returns will be larger in the future in spite of the increased production.

Farm News of the Great Southwest

DOWN-TO-DATE REPORTS FROM TIMES CORRESPONDENTS

LOMPOC.—Blue-pod small white beans have been found well adapted to the soil and climate of Lompoc Valey. W. T. Martin reports a crop of 585 sacks from twenty-six acres, running 110 pounds to the sack. He estimates that the yield will be around 2500 pounds to the acre. On the Fred Gillett place the land has yielded on an average of eighteen sacks to the acre. Both growers irrigated. Mr. Martin flooded his field in March, and had the soil in perfect tilth at the time he seeded it.

GRAPE ACREAGE GROWING

SANTA YNEZ.—This valley is to witness a large increase in vineyard acreage during the coming planting season. Demand for grapes is considerable, and vineyards now in bearing are producing good crops of superior quality fruit Robert Nelson has three acres of grapes, set out in 1888, the vines having borne heavily for forty years. In the last three years this small vineyard has netted him $1800, Mr. Nelson says. F. F. Barnes harvested a good crop this year from his 3-year-old vineyard, though it has not been irrigated. The vineyard produced two tons to the acre this year. Landowners are looking about for irrigation water, believing that under irrigation the vineyard industry would become one of the main factors of the valley and highly profitable.

DAIRY DAY SATURDAY

OXNARD.—The local Chamber of Commerce has issued over 500 invitations to stockmen of Central and Southern California to attend the second annual Dairy Day celebration here Saturday, November 7. Dairying commenced here as a community effort four years ago when the Ventura County Ice and Milk Company built its creamery at Oxnard. During the first nine months in 1922, the gross sales of the company totaled $29,418.69. In 1923, the gross sales were $123,895.35, and in 1924 they amounted to $242,804.58. For 1925, they are estimated at around $300,000. Alfalfa is being grown in considerable quantities, and a satisfactory rotation with sugar beets and Lima beans has been adopted.

CROP ROTATION PLAN

SAN LUIS OBISPO.—Grain growers of this county are planning a crop rotation of grain and hopi beans with sheep to graze the stubble and straw, so that grain, beans, wool and mutton may be produced from land which has grown nothing but grain before. An additional advantage in the increased fertility of the land, without expense of spreading is anticipated also.

POMEGRANATE JUICE

TERRA BELLA.—With a temporary press in operation, juice is being pressed by the Pomegranate Producers' Company here. A power press has been contracted for. H. M. Shields of the Speed Products, Company, Los Angeles, contracted for the first shipment of juice, according to George Lockwood, secretary-treasurer of the local company. Mr. Shields supplies orange juice to schools, cafeterias and fountains of Los Angeles and it is believed the new product will prove equally popular. Culls will be used to begin with in processing. Juice crushed from the fruit will be pasteurized and bottled.

ESTIMATED HIS CROP

VISALIA.—L. E. Deprew, a peach grower of the Visalia district, is declared to have had one of the best harvests in this section of the valley. Mr. Deprew's crop was doubly interesting as he himself predicted his own crop. At pruning time he declared that if his pruning was done as he wished he would get sixty tons of peaches. Others estimated the crop at thirty-five tons, but when harvest came Deprew took sixty-two tons from the orchard. The orchard produced only 5520 pounds of No. 2 peaches, the rest being rated at No 1. He received $40 a ton in Armona for the No. 1 fruit, while the No. 2 stuff brought $22. His only trouble was that the crop was so heavy he had to order extra props to prevent breaking.

WILL BUY HEATERS

LINDSAY.—Growers of this district have organized the Lindsay Orchard Heaters' association for the purpose of buying heating supplies in large quantities at wholesale prices. The membership list is growing and is now up to twenty-eight. C. A. Glenn, L. S. White and A. L. Lewis have been appointed to prepare by-laws for the association.

EXPECT QUICK ACTION

EL CENTRO.—The Niland Water Company, lying north and west of Niland, controlling 16,840 acres of land, will soon have completed its organization and be ready for the building of laterals and canals for the accommodation of settlers. On November 25, bonds for $140,000 will be voted, and as soon as these are sold active construction work will commence. The company will be served by the Imperial Irrigation District. To do this it will be necessary to exceed the Highline Canal some five miles beyond Niland, its former terminus. The company has been formed by settlers who have filed on land within the boundaries of the district.

BIG BARLEY ACREAGE

CALIPATRIA.—Les Smith, one of the largest barley growers in Imperial Valley, expects to put in about 1000 acres to that grain. He is farming on the old Rockwood road south of this city, and has 300 acres seeded to new alfalfa and barley and 130 acres to barley. Several men and teams are preparing an additional 600 acres for barley.

MAKING CIDER

REDLANDS.—Jones Brothers are operating a cider plant here and about 10,000 gallons are made each day from fifty tons of apples. The fruit comes from Yucaipa, Oakglen and Beaumont, and comprises culls, wind-bruised or small apples. The cider is run from the presses through filters and then into refrigerated coils and reduced to 33 degrees. It is stored. The plant will make approximately 150,000 gallons of cider and about the same quantity of vinegar this year.

"REDS" GO SOUTH

ARCADIA.—O. A. Talle, Rhode Island Red breeder of local poultrymen's colony, reports the recent shipment of twenty-four Rhode Island Red pullets and three cockerels to San Salvador, Central America. This stock was purchased by F. W. Taylor, who is in charge of the Department of Agriculture of San Salvador, through the co-operation of E. H. Agee, secretary of the California Livestock Association, and will be used to improve the poultry flocks of the Southern republic.

CERTIFICATES ISSUED

PHOENIX (Ariz.)—Summer humidity and September rains have helped prevent shedding of the cotton crop of the Salt River Valley. Some 23,000 acres of Pima cotton have been inspected and certificates of clean fields have been issued to 456 growers. In all, 168 growers were refused certificates. A price of $70 a ton for Pima planting seed has been set by the Maricopa County Farm Bureau Pure Seed Association, based on an oil mill seed price of $30 a ton.

ALL ON A CITY LOT

VAN NUYS.—Phelps Taylor, who lives on a city lot on the north edge of town, is planning to eat a number of fryers in the early spring. The other day he bought 100 baby Plymouth Rock chicks and took them home. He is brooding them under a large inverted wash tub with holes in the top for ventilation. Under the tub is an electric light surrounded by fresh loose hay into

Better Marketing Need in Bee Industry

By OLIVER SAYLOR

Much has been said of late about the marketing of honey, and very little has been done. At present it is left to the producer to dispose of his crop as best he can. Some attempts have been made at co-operative marketing and most of them have met with failure of some kind.

Right after any honey season you may find all hands of honey, put up in all kinds of containers on the market. At present

Visalia Poultry and Dog Show

VISALIA.—The second annual Poultry, Pigeon and Dog Show was held here October 15 to 17. There were over 700 entries, and $1500 was offered in cash awards, besides seventy-seven cups and trophies. It was staged under the auspices of the Visalia Chamber of Commerce.

Robert V. Moore, San Leandro, judged the poultry, the Visalia show making the two hundredth at which he has judged during the thirty-five years of his service. Kyle Onstott, Pasadena, judged the dogs.

In the poultry division the best male bird in the show and in the American class was a Rhode Island Red cockerel shown by David M. Orr, Selma. Best female in the show was a White Minorca hen shown by George Edwards, San Jose, who also won best bird in the Mediterranean class. Robert Close, Exeter, won best bird in the Asiatic class with a Black Langshan hen, while a Dark Cornish cockerel shown by Hazen G. Redfern, Dinuba, was the best bird in the English class. Mr. Orr showed a pen of Reds which was adjudged best pen in the show. R. C. Whitworth, Hanford, won best bird in the miscellaneous class with a young Bronze turkey tom. The Rhode Island Red Club specials went to J. Herbert Swank, who was also awarded best shaped male, and Mr. Orr, best colored male.

In the pigeon division E. F. Driggs, Visalia, won best old cock of the show with a White King. Best old hen and young hen went to L. S. Webster, Fresno, on White Frillbacks. David Orr won best young cock on a White Fantail. O. M. Ferguson, Visalia, won best pen of squab breeders with White Kings.

These Rabbits Have to Pay Their Way

ROSCOE.—About a year ago Ray F. Wisel suffered a nervous breakdown. He and his wife moved from Los Angeles to their El Reposo Ranch, two miles north of this city. They had enjoyed raising rabbits in the backyard and decided to enter the business commercially. The first principle they adopted was to make the rabbits pay for their feed and equipment, and they have done better than that. In July, they say, they netted $70, almost all from the sale of meat.

One of His Pets

Mr. Wisel tried out several breeds but finally settled on New Zealand Reds. He believes they supply a fine quality of meat and gain flesh very early. He has about 750 rabbits on the place and expects to build up the stock to 200 breeding does.

Hutches are built as the stock increases. They are established under a high shed for comfort, and additional shade is provided with gunnysacks. Especial care is given the doe a month before breeding. She is isolated and fed for increase or decrease of weight as her condition warrants. He believes proper feeding can be depended on to product market rabbits weighing from three and a half to four pounds at eight weeks.

Mr. Wisel emphasizes the importance of good breeding stock. The breeders must have great vigor and vitality, he says. The rabbit breeder has to decide what he will produce—breeding animals for meat or show stock.

Later on the Wisels plan to establish a sale for fertilizer. Rabbit manure is highly regarded by citrus growers because of its large nitrogen content.

Highways Watched for Chicken Thieves

VAN NUYS.—With the streets and highways in San Fernando Valley being patrolled at night by several special squads of Valley Division police, poultry raisers large and small in this district are feeling more secure than at any other time within recent months. The new patrol service started with the beginning of the fall season. Another thing that is calculated to halt chicken thefts is the announcement by tthe Poultry Breeders' Association of its offer of $250 for the arrest and conviction of marauders. When wholesale chicken thefts in this section reached a point where poultry raisers found themselves suffering great losses, the police department was appealed to, causing the organization of the night patrol in all parts of the valley. Meetings were held and various offers made for the arrest of thieves. One of the original methods of the gang whose operations have now been somewhat curtailed, was to use gas in carrying out robberies. This gas was squirted into henneries. When the chickens were silenced entire flocks were carted off, revived and taken to the city markets. Some poultry owners, here, at Owensmouth and at Roscoe are said to have lost as high as $1000 worth of fowls in a night.

RAINS HELP ORANGES

REDLANDS.—The orange growers are much pleased over the early rains which have wet the ground, washed the leaves and benefited the trees. With these early season rains the fruit will come up to better sizes and be less apt to split. The precipitation will retard coloring somewhat.

imported from Persia. From this planting two palms survived, one male and one female. During the last few years good edible fruit has been secured. Last year over 300 pounds of dates were sold by the owner in local markets for from 75 cents to $1.00 a pound.

The mango, a native of India, was one of the most unique fruits on display. The mango tree is an evergreen and grows to an immense size. The fruit is eaten raw and has a delicious flavor. The specimens shown in the exhibit were grown by J. C. Hill, Tustin.

Several plates of feijoa, a South American fruit, were furnished by A. F. Manz, La Habra, and C. P. Taft, Orange. The tree is a member of the myrtle family, and the fruit is becoming quite popular. Many feijoa hedges may be seen in Orange county and the Southland.

A seedling sapota, grown by P. L. Collins, Villa Park, was a horticultural curiosity. The sapota is used as a dessert and served with cream and sugar. Other plate displays of the sapota included the seeded varieties of the white sapota. The Galloway sapota was featured by A. E. Zapf, Orange, and is one of the desirable varieties of this fruit. The Natal plum, a native of the upper Nile district, is grown by Albert Wilson, Yorba Linda, and was shown by him. The fruit is used extensively in India for salads and preserves. The carob bean or St. John's Bread, resembling a dried Chili pepper, is a native of the Mediterranean countries, where it is used as a stock food and sometimes ground into flour for human consumption.

particularly interested in the specimens of small berry-like fruit growing on bushes about the size of a potted plant. The fruit is used for jellies and beverages. It makes a highly colored jelly. The specimens on exhibit were grown by R. E. Launer, La Habra.

That bananas can be grown in Orange county was demonstrated by George W. Beck, La Habra and C. E. Utt, Lemon Heights. There were splendid specimens of this fruit on display in the extension booth.

Several varieties of avocados were shown, although fair week came at a poor time of the year to get the maximum number of displays. Among the varieties shown, which have reached commercial production in Orange county, were the Fuerte, Taft, Sharpless and Linda. A few Mexican seedlings were shown, also the Ray and Allshine, the latter a new variety from the C. P. Taft grove. The avocados were exhibited through the courtesy of the San Joaquin Fruit Company; Marcy Ranch, Tustin; C. P. Taft, Orange; E. E. Knight, Yorba Linda, and B. H. Sharpless, Tustin.

A section for the fig display included the Kadota, White Adriatic, Brunswick, Black San Pedro and Mission varieties, all of them common to Orange county.

The persimmon section of the exhibit featured the Lotus fruit, a native of Manchuria, which is used as a root for persimmon nursery stock. Trees of this stock are grown by M. L. McCarty, Placentia. George Sherwood, Fullerton, furnished variety exhibits of persimmons, including Yemon, Hyakume, Tourunoko, Hachiya, Goshio and Tananashi.

The Development of the San Gorgonio Pass Almond Industry

By W. A. LINKLETTER

BANNING.—The Banning district is the only one in Southern California where almonds are grown on a commercial scale of any importance. A check of almond acreage made by J. E. Liddle, horticultural inspector for the San Gorgonia Pass disthict, indicated that there are 977 acres in the Banning section, 140 acres at Cabazon six miles east of Banning, and 109 acres on the Indian Reservation to the northeast.

About forty years ago almonds were planted in Banning for ornamentals. When altitude and climate were found particularly favorable, orchardists grew interested and began setting out small tracts. Mrs. Ida T. Bird is one of the pioneers of the industry. She set thirty acres to almonds thirty years ago. For many years this was the largest almond orchard in the district, and it still produces well.

In most of the orchards here the trees are set twenty-two feet apart each way. The normal production of mature trees is around 1200 pounds per acre, although some of the better orchards produce as high as 1800 pounds to the acre. After maturity they require little pruning. A few suckers are cut out to shape the trees. They are given a wet spray while dormant and another just before blossoming time, usually in February and March. A cover crop is sowed after the harvest in the summer and this is plowed or disced under in the spring. Regular cultivations and irrigations are given once a month from May 1 to October 1.

Almonds at Cabazon mature nearly a month earlier than those at Banning and the crop in that section is harvested soon after the middle of July. The gathering of the crop at Banning starts about August 20 as a rule.

At Edge of Desert

Heavily loaded almond tree in Banning district.

Almonds are not picked by hand but are knocked from the trees with twelve-foot poles. Two large sheets of canvas, fifteen by thirty feet each, are spread under each tree. When a sufficient quantity of nuts has been knocked down on the canvas they are gathered into boxes and taken to a central station, where they are hulled by women and children. The hulling is contracted for at from 2 to 2 1-2 cents a pound, depending on the variety. Then the nuts are spread out to dry. Later, they are sacked and taken to the warehouse of the Banning Almond Growers' Association. The warehouse is a fireproof cement structure with about 10,000 square feet of floor space and cost $14,000. It was paid for very quickly by deducting 1-4 cent per pound on all almonds brought in by members of the association. R. H. Coombs, association manager and director, says that 95 per cent of the almond growers of the district are now members of the organization.

When the almonds arrive at the warehouse the grower is given a receipt and a few days later he receives a check for half the price set by the California Almond Growers' Exchange. Banning is one of twenty-four associations which form the exchange. In the warehouse the almonds are graded and then processed. They are steamed first and then placed in an airtight chamber and subjected to sulphur fumes for a few minutes to bleach the shells and kill any insect life. They are placed in new sacks and shipped in carlots as per instructions from the head office of the exchange in San Francisco.

The California Almond Growers' Exchange has the largest almond cracking plant in the world at Sacramento and many of the choicest cracking nuts are shipped from Banning. The demand for California shelled almonds is far in excess of the supply. According to Mr. Coombs, the exchange received one order from an Eastern manufacturer of chocolate confectionery for 1,000,000 pounds of shelled California almonds. It was unable to fill the order.

Mr. Coombs says there are over 100 varieties of almonds produced in the world. Only about twelve are grown in the Banning district. The Nonpareil, I. X. L., Ne Plus Ultra and Drake have been found to be the most profitable varieties, the first and last named being the best cracking almonds. The Nonpareil and I. X. L. are the earliest; Ne Plus Ultra follows about a week later, and the Drake, which is a hard-shelled variety, ripens two weeks later still. This makes the harvesting convenient. Practically all the growers in the district raise those four varieties on account of interpollination.

Among some of the larger almond growers are C. O. Barker, who has eighty acres, Don G. Repplier with seventy acres and Mrs Ida T. Bird with forty acres. C. D. Hamilton, who is president of the California Almond Growers' Exchange and of the Banning association, has twenty-eight acres. Mr. and Mrs. Hamilton are on a tour around the world and were recently heard from in Italy, where the former was studying almond production. On account of cheap land and labor in the old world, foreign-grown nuts made the almond industry unprofitable in the United States until a high protective tariff was secured.

For the 1200 acres in almonds in this district, Mr. Coombs places the normal maximum output at 500 tons. On account of insufficient rainfall for the three preceding seasons the crop amounted to only about 300 tons last year. The output this year is estimated at about 50 per cent of normal.

Roselle Buds Bring a Surprising Profit

SAN BERNARDINO.— On a vacant city lot, Ben H. Haun, San Bernardino, has harvested two tons of roselle buds at a profit of $2000—an extraordinary bit of "spare-time farming," as he describes his experience.

Mr. Haun said he planted the roselle plants, for ornamental purposes and to keep weeds out of the vacant lot. With ordinary care and regular irrigation, the plants throve and within a few weeks were literally loaded with buds, which are used in making jellies and jams. Besides serving as a flower bed, the plants returned a profit, Mr. Haun selling his entire crop at 8 cents a pound to San Bernardino fruit and produce dealers, who welcomed the buds as a quick selling commodity.

"I had heard of roselle jelly years ago," says Mr. Haun, "and determined to try my luck with the plant in the vacant lot. I never dreamed of producing two tons on a lot, 50 by 150 feet. The bushes kept right on growing after I had harvested a crop and the buds came as fast as I picked them. I was surprised at the market for them and that so many housewives knew how to prepare the buds for jellies and jams."

Concord Grapes Grown for Juice Making

TUSTIN.—What is believed to be the largest California Concord grape vineyard in California is in Orange county on Lemon Heights in the Tustin district. According to reports from James B. Utt, owner of the land, the yield of the vines this year will be more than 300 tons of grapes, with only one-half of the acreage in bearing. California Concords are used almost exclusively for juice and it is for this reason that the large vineyards have been started near Tustin. The Utt grape juice factory in Tustin will turn out about 60,000 gallons of grape juice this year, it is estimated.

The grape juice industry at Tustin started less than six years ago. The land upon which the grapes are located was producing sage brush and cactus at the beginning. Mr. Utt has 150 acres of hill land in grapes. Only about one-half of it is in bearing this year. Next year, when the remainder of the grapes begin to bear, it is expected that the production will pass the 600-ton mark.

Expansions in the juice factory have been made to care for increased production. The plant has grown from a small concern to one of the county's leading industries. The start was on one acre of ground and in a small backyard factory. Several buildings are now used and employment is given to many persons each year.

The entire crop of grapes this year was not made into juice, a large amount being sold on the market. The crop last year amounted to about 150 tons, which were all juiced.

ORGANIZATION SOUGHT

VISALIA.—Organization of Jersey, Guernsey and Holstein cattle breeders of Tulare county along lines similar to those followed successfully in Stanislaus county, is the desire of the Tulare County Farm Bureau, according to M. A. Lindsay, assistant county farm advisor in charge of dairy work. Mr. Lindsay believes such an organization would prove invaluable to the promotion of the dairy industry in the county. Sponsoring of calf clubs similar to the pig clubs would be an important function of such an organization.

FROM a foundation herd of six cows and a bull, all registered pure-bred Holstein-Friesians, J. L. Sebastian and Son, Wasco, have in seven years developed a herd of fifty individuals. The original herd was composed of an unusually good lot of individuals which proved to be uniformly heavy producers. For two years this herd has won highest sweepstakes awards in the Kern County Cow-Testing Association, the herd's average production for last year being 587.8 pounds of butter fat. Probably the outstanding individual record made in the herd to date is that of Zampa Aurelia Segis Pontiac, the three times 30-pound produced on seven-day tests, and with a yearly production of 1312.93 pounds of fat. Twilight Shadow of Rickwood, another 30-pound cow in this herd, has produced 1060 pounds of butter fat in 348 days; Wrena Princess Hengerveld made 1028 pounds of fat in 356 days; Nancy Lee Walker, a 2-year-old, produced 1000 pounds of butter in a year, and Aaggie Goshen, Canary 2d, a three times 30-pound cow, produced 1000 pounds of butter in nine months. Of six cows that were on official test last year, five of them produced over 1000 pounds of butter. The herd is headed by Sir Aaggie DeKol Mead 5th, six of whose seven nearest dams were thirty-pound cows, and all of them 1000-pound yearly producers. The junior herd sire is King Japonnette Regis of Dairy Dale, whose dam is reported to stand seventh in the ten leading cows of the country. While his dairy interests predominate, Mr. Sebastian, with his son Carl, conducts a diversified farm of 160 acres near Wasco. The revenue from the sale of milk from the herd is reported to amount to $500 per month, this being one of the chief incomes from the farm.

The September report of the Kings County Cow Test Association shows an average production of 746 pounds of milk and 26.4 pounds of butter fat made by 779 cows on test during the month, with forty cows making forty pounds or more of butter fat each. The highest producing purebred cow owned by Helm Farms, Corcoran, made 1716 pounds of milk and 61.7 pounds of fat, while the high grade cow produced 857 pounds of milk and 61.2 pounds of fat, and is owned by Perkins Ranch Company, Corcoran. Fourteen cows were culled out of the association during the month, being considered unprofitable by members. The herd of Rhoades and Garcia, Lemoore, consisting of twenty-four head of grade cows, produced an average of 736 pounds of milk and 29.9 pounds of fat, while the purebred herd from the G. U. Clark Estate, Hanford, consisting of forty cows averaged 928 pounds of milk and 30.1 pounds of fat. A herd of six cows owned by Garrett Boer, Lemoore averaged 898 pounds of milk and 32.7 pounds of fat, and a purebred herd of eleven head owned by J. A. Florey, Lemoore, averaged 659 pounds of milk and 32.6 pounds of fat.

Los Angeles county dairymen and their families will meet at the annual Dairymen's Field Day to be held under auspices of the Los Angeles County Farm Bureau at the Arden Dairy, El Monte, November 5. The program will start at 10:30 a. m., with a free barbecue at noon. Assistant Farm Advisor C. V. Castle and Vice-President Frank Pellissier of the Farm Bureau are in charge of the day's program, the feature of which will be an address by Prof. E. C. Voorhies, for a long time connected with the College of Agriculture at Davis and Berkeley. Ed Gordon, formerly Assistant Farm Advisor of Los Angeles county, and now Extension Dairy Specialist for California, will talk on the dairy improvement program under way in the State. With the closing of the cow-testing year, 33 cups, including the capital award, the Farm and Orchard Magazine cup and 240 ribbons will be awarded to the winners of the Farm Bureau dairy cow competition.

Keitaro Mukai, special representative of T. Shikata and Company of Osaka, Japan, recently purchased fifty head of pure-bred Holstein cattle from California herds. This stock will be shipped to Japan to replenish herds that were depleted by a scourge of pleural pneumonia. The animals were selected from dairy herds in Los Angeles, Stanislaus, and other counties of the State.

Anderson and Routt, owners of the Paragon herd of Holstein cattle of Tipton, report the recent death of their senior herd sire, Toyon Fayne Valdessa. This valuable bull ranked 32d among Holstein sires of the United States during the year 1923-24. He was purchased three years ago with the original Paragon herd from Agee Brothers, Rivera. King Pontiac Tola Ormsby now becomes senior sire in the Paragon herd, and Paragon Christmas Lad, a son of Paragon Christmas Lady, will be used as junior herd sire.

The total shipments of stocker and feeder cattle from the twelve leading markets of the country during July, August and September were only 898,000 head, as compared to 986,000 for the same three-months period last year, according to a recent report of the California Cattlemen's Association. These reduced shipments occurred in the face of the highest fat cattle market in five years, with prospects for a much larger corn crop in the corn belt this year, and with old corn selling generally at lower prices than for the same period of last year. In view of the heavy early marketing of western cattle, and a greatly improved feed situation during recent weeks in the Southwest, it is felt that a continued strong market for feeder cattle seems highly probable.

A shipment of 1200 registered Rambouillet sheep was made last month from Sanpete and Iron counties, Utah, to Russia. The sheep will be used for the establishment of a breeding farm in that country. Two representatives of the Russian government, with the aid of an interpreter selected the sheep, chiefly breeding ewes. The animals will be attended in transit by an expert American caretaker, and will be landed at Odessa.

To determine the practicability of producing finished beef from calves put on feed at weaning time and marketed at from 12 to 20 months under California conditions, the division of animal husbandry, University of California, is conducting a feeding experiment at the University Farm, Davis. Seventy-four high-grade Shorthorn steers were brought to Davis from the Dibblee ranch, Lompoc. The animals have been divided into six lots for feeding. One lot will be given corn silage, rolled barley, three pounds of alfalfa hay and one of cottonseed meal. The second lot will get merely the silage and barley. The third will have another combination and the fourth, will get cocoanut meal with the barley. The fifth will be fed silage, raisin pulp, alfalfa hay and cottonseed meal, and the sixth another ration for fattening. The experiments are to determine not only whether baby beef may be prepared profitably, but the values of various feeds on the dressing percentages.

One hundred and twenty-five calves from Los Alamos have been delivered at the California Polytechnic school at San Luis Obispo to be fed for the baby beef market by boys of the school. Purchase of the calves was made by W. S. Witton representative of the Los Angeles Union Stock Yards, and the boys will sell the beef next spring to the packers. The stock comes from the Doheny ranch, and will be taken care of by ten boys who will feed and care for the animals, under the supervision of the school authorities and the packers.

The premium list for the Pacific Slope Dairy Show to be held in Oakland, November 14 to 21, carries the announcement of offerings totaling more than $5000 for dairy cattle and dairy products, in addition to medals, ribbons and trophies. Indications are that the live-stock division show this year will be the best in the five-year history of the event, according to Manager Frank T. Murphy. Several Southern California breeders, it is understood, will have herds on exhibit. R. A. Condee, Chino, is director in charge of the live-stock division, and William Regan, Division of Animal Husbandry, University of California, is superintendent of the show as a whole.

Cattle of good quality will be received this year in large numbers from Nevada, due to excellent feed conditions in that State, according to a recent report from the California Cattlemen's Association. While California cattle coming from the mountain territory have been supplying a large share of the receipts, adjoining States soon will furnish the bulk of the cattle slaughtered in this State, Association officials declare, with Nevada, Oregon, Arizona and Utah sending most of the shipments.

The first issue of "The Cream Can" has just been issued from the office of the Tulare County Farm Bureau through the Tulare Co-operative Cow Testing Association. It is the plan of the association to publish this little pamphlet every month for the benefit of the association members—A complete monthly record of the newly organized group will be regularly printed.

The Tulare County Co-Operative Cow-Testing Association recently completed the first monthly report since its organization under the direction of the Tulare County Farm Bureau and the Agricultural Extension Service. The report for the month of September shows the number of cows tested to have been 1075, the number of herds tested, forty. The average milk production per cow of the association herds for the month is given at 807.9 pounds, the average fat production at 26.9 pounds. J. R. Smith, Henry Skidmore and M. J. Bottoncourt all had cows making over sixty pounds of butter fat.

SUCCESS.—Two stalks of Sudan grass, nine and one-half feet high, grown on the John Hickle ranch in Success district, were shown in the Porterville booth at the recent Tulare County Fair. Sudan grass is freely grown in this region as a forage crop.

Better Marketing Need in Bee Industry

By OLIVER SAYLOR

Much has been said of late about the marketing of honey, and very little has been done. At present it is left to the producer to dispose of his crop as best he can. Some attempts have been made at co-operative marketing and most of them have met with failure of some kind.

Right after any honey season you may find all kinds of honey, put up in all kinds of containers on the market. At present there is no systematized mode of marketing this food product. I have seen several ways of marketing tried and have tried several with my own product and I am becoming convinced of the need of some kind of co-operative marketing of this crop.

The solution of the problem lies with the honey producers themselves. They must get together and form some sort of an organization through which they can with some uniformity of purpose and action prepare and sell their honey. In this way the quality and the price can be stabilized. And why not? Eighty-five per cent of the walnuts are sold through an association. Practically all the oranges and lemons are so disposed of. Can not the bee men do as well? I think they can, I know they can if they are as good business men as their neighbors who raise walnuts or oranges or lemons or raisins. I think that as long as we honey producers are trying to sell our own product to the trade, so long will we be in an inferior position. The only hope of the bee industry, if we are to be a real industry with beekeeping as a business instead of as a side line is to market our product through some central association. Some of us had what we called a serious set back to co-operative marketing ideas some years ago. That attempt is always pointed to as an argument against another effort. As I view that experiment now it seems to me that the application of better business principles would have saved the day for it. The co-operative part was all right; the difficulty was lack of far-sightedness. A short-sighted policy will ruin any business. The bee man has been a poor business man, it would appear, and needs a real functioning co-operative association, through which he disposes of his crop. It will take some brain work to put such a plan through, but there are unquestionably men in the industry with vision and capacity to make it a reality.

The first step that such an association should take is to try to get a law passed regulating the preparation and packing of honey. It should be made so rigid that never again would there be found on the market such poorly put up honey as we usually run across in the country district stores. These merchants are handling the product of some local beekeeper who is trying to market his own crop and who lacks the equipment to properly put it up with no straining and bottling facilities, he sometimes sells it without straining at all, merely letting it settle and bottling cold. I have seen it when it floated full of small particles of wax and other foreign substances. This kind of honey on a city market would not sell at all, but in the local country market where the producer is at least known to the storekeeper it passes. The only possible remedy for this is to have stringent laws regulating the way honey shall be prepared. Pray why should honey alone of all our foods be unregulated as to the manner of its preparation and care?

to accept the conditions with which they must comply. On their part, the inspectors realize that the regulation requirements for cooling in these inland valleys are hardly feasible and have arranged for changes in the ordinary rules for "hot country" needs, provided extra care is devoted to keeping the milk clean.

Los Angeles has a right to be proud of her milk. Samples sent to national dairy products shows have won the highest awards repeatedly, even under somewhat difficult and adverse circumstances. This is not only a feather in the cap of the health department, but is a source of assurance for the people. They may be justly proud of the milk they drink and of the host of dairymen who produce it and who follow the rigorous rules which have been hedged around their industry. Leading dairymen declare that the prices of milk locally are not unduly high when the expenses of the business are considered. Probably the cost of producing milk in this district is higher than in any other part of the United States, but the quality and purity of the product are assured, and the health of the community safeguarded.

Random Notes and Suggestions for the Winter Home Gardener

By ROSS H. GAST

WHILE the next few months in the Southern California home garden will not require much planting activity, there are varied tasks which should keep the gardener busy. Plans should be laid for the coming year so that when the spring planting season is at hand, sowing can be made at the proper time with soil conditions at their best. Perhaps the most important work at the present time is fertilizing the spots which are to be given over to the tearliest spring plantings.

It is not too late to plant a cover crop in plots which are now vacant. This is a very important step in home gardening in the Southland. The value of the cover crop lies not only in the plant food added in turning under the plants, for it also improves the physical condition of the soil. Too few gardeners realize the value of cover cropping in bringing up the fertility of their soil. Melilotus Indica is considered to be the best for this purpose while melilotus alba is good on a heavier type of soil. The first will grow on through the winter to perfection and in the spring should be turned under carefully so that plantings can follow a few weeks later.

It is good business also to make a garden plan at this time for next year's planting. The garden plan is often known as an amateur's hobby, but a great many experienced gardeners keep them very carefully. The writer has a detailed chart of his garden operations filed away covering a period of the last three years. This not only shows where the various vegetables have been growing, but the quantity and quality produced. In my opinion, it is one of the things which makes home gardening most interesting and while it may not be of the greatest value from a practical standpoint, it does provide a very thorough record of activities during the various seasons.

It is supposed that the home gardener has cleaned off matured crops and composted them. If this has been carefully done, there will be material for fertilizing some of the plots. If vegetables like sweet corn are planned for a certain area this composted material should be turned under rather deeply, say twelve inches if possible. This holds true for such crops as potatoes and string beans. Where the root crops such as turnips, carrots, beets; leaf crops such as lettuce and spinach, and such vine crops as cucumbers and melons are planted, the composted material does not need to go under quite so deeply. If this material is turned under at the present time it will receive all benefits of the coming rains and when the spring season comes around, it will be in good shape for planting.

FOR PRESENT PLANTING

Planting activities at the present time are not especially varied, but the root crops and Swiss Chard, cabbage and cauliflower can be planted. The first named should be sowed on rather high double rows so they will get as much benefit from the sun as possible. It is also a good idea to run these rows east and west during the winter. Cauliflower and cabbage will do well at this time, in fact, it is a season when commercial cabbage growers plant heavily. There are also some perennial crops that can be set out and it is an especially good season for planting rhubarb roots. There are several types of rhubarb grown at the present time and all are popular. Commercially, both winter and summer varieties can be planted and both can be given a place in the home garden. The selecting of these varieties can be made from catalogues of the various local seedsmen. Rhubarb will do well in the shade, so if the home gardener has a protected place in the garden where other plants do not seem to do well, rhubarb roots can be given a place there. The soil should be in good condition to receive rhubarb roots; they should be set in ridges with the crown even with the surface of the soil. For the home garden, plants can be set as close as two to three feet apart, but when any number of roots are to comprise the planting, they should be spaced three feet apart in rows five feet across. During the winter when the roots will begin to establish themselves, the surface of the soil should be cultivated very carefully and if possible mulched with manure or composted material. This allows the warmth to penetrate the roots and helps them get a start so when the spring season arrives, they are ready to put forth new foliage.

A Popular Winter Vegetable.

The Hubbard squash keeps well and squash pie is almost as good as pumpkin.

If the home tomato has been planted, the gardener might try holding over his vines through the winter by pruning them back and covering them with straw or cloth. The writer has several fine plants that will be carried over this winter, if possible. They have been bearing vigorously for the past several months, and promise to continue until Jack Frost nips them some weeks hence.

PLAN FOR HOT BED

Another point to remember is that the hot bed will have to be made soon so now is the time to plan for it. There are many ways of preparing a hot bed, and these will be given in articles to follow. A spot in the corner of the garden should be selected, however, and a source of stable manure for the bed should be located ahead of time.

Hubbard squash and pumpkins can be picked and stored away for future use at this time. Many gardeners have learned the proper place for squash—as a cover for fences and out buildings, for it produces well, and also hides unsightly spots for part of the year at least.

Another point that might well be noted is the keeping of seed over the winter. Very often the gardener buys enough seed one year to last two and three, and this is not always properly cared for. Weevils soon find beans, the mouse and its big brother, the rat, often clean up other seed when it is stored in outhouses, so if possible, an air-tight can should be used to keep them. The writer has a wide-mouthed tin can, once used for chocolate, in which he keeps his seeds. Weevils infested some beans soon after they were stored, so they were placed in this can and fumigated with carbon bisulphide.

A Winter Beet Specialist.

Mrs. Janet Hayes of Los Angeles has had success with these in her home garden.

One Onion Crop Enough for Costa Mesa Man

COSTA MESA.—E. A. Ludlam was an electrical engineer of Akron, O., and close application to office work in the damp climate and cold winters stole away his health. He selected Orange county as a place to find it again. He realized that he should be outdoors, so he secured a tract of land at Costa Mesa and chose onions as the media to bring him close to the soil.

The accepted method of onion planting here is drilling, but Mr. Ludlam planted his seed in hot house beds and transplanted the bulbs in March. All summer he cultivated the onion plants on one acre and he appeared to "have a way with him" when it came to onions. Some of them grew to be as large as cantaloupes and he claims a yield of seventeen tons from one acre. He received $55 a ton from a chain store company, which bought his entire crop.

Mr. Ludlam will not plant onions again on an acre nor will he enlarge his planting. He says his health has come back and he is going to Los Angeles and take up his profession there. He says that the news of this phenomenal yield has spread far and wide, and he expects that the Costa Mesa section will have an influx of onion growers who may get big crops but who may break the market.

STUDIES NEEDS OF WHEAT

MESA (Ariz.)—Wheat needs fertilization and crop rotation as much as any other crop, according to Dan Drorbaugh. Last fall he plowed under a heavy crop of sour clover, and this summer harvested an acre average of 2200 pounds of excellent Early Baart wheat as compared with 1500 pounds to the acre harvested by his neighbors. He believes in early planting, getting his seed into the ground in October.

Productive Orchard Is Created in Desert

APPLE VALLEY.—In illustrating how effectively managed orchards can be made to pay well in portions of San Bernardino county which a few years ago were only desert wastes, the Ed Rhodes forty-acre apple ranch at Apple Valley is being cited by Farm Adviser H. J. Wilder. It is estimated that the yield from this 12-year-old orchard this year will be 8750 boxes of excellent quality fruit.

According to Mr. Wilder, this yield shows clearly that orchards planted in well-selected localities in this county, and intelligently managed, can produce heavy yields of high quality fruit. The grove's fine record is attributed partly to the fact that for the past three years alfalfa has been planted between the rows as a cover crop, the alfalfa roots so loosening the soil that it takes irrigation water easily. In addition, there is a large volume of water available for the grove at all times.

The orchard is owned by Ed Rhodes, Chino banker, and is managed by A. W. Phillips.

Reduces Height of His Tall Date Palms

PHOENIX (Ariz.)—Ira Beck, who has the old university experiment farm northwest of Phoenix, owns a number of old date palms, the first to be brought into Salt River Valley from Africa or Asia Minor. They are so tall it is hard to gather the fruit and there is danger of their breaking under high winds. He is trying a plan said to be used in Saharan oases. By the side of an old palm he digs a ten-foot well, into which he slides the tree, its root system almost intact. He fills up the hole gradually. One palm broke as it dropped, but he slid the upper section deep in earth and it lived and continued to bear.

Especially when rooted in boxes, after the method of the university agricultural department, suckers form a material part of the income of the Salt River Valley date grower. Shoots from imported palms often bring $25 or more each, though good results have been obtained from bearing palms selected from plantings of commernished by Federal authorities years ago. Several growers are making money from palms selected fro mplantings of commercial date seeds, although the product is apt to be much mixed as to color and quality.

Reports Show Good Crop Prospects for Imperial's "North End" District

CALIPATRIA.—Farming conditions in the "North End" district of Imperial Valley are favorable for big winter crops of alfalfa, barley, wheat, lettuce, peas, grapefruit and other fruits and vegetables that are raised in large quantities. There was water enough for all summer crops, and cotton, milo maize and alfalfa are in good condition.

Cotton is the leading crop of the district and a recent check, by Superintendent Williams of the Imperial Irrigation District gives 20,338 acres in this staple around Calipatria. Leaf worms and drop in some fields caused considerable loss, but practically all North End cotton is reported by growers and gin field men as putting on a heavy top crop and with the usual weather conditions, it is expected the output will be larger than last year's. The picking of volunteer and early planted fields has been in progress since July and J. H. Robertson, who has 100 acres in cotton northeast of Calipatria says his patch yields forty bales the first picking and that he expects to pick about sixty bales from the second and third. William Young, who has "stuck" to cotton raising in this district for several years, says he has 700 acres which he thinks will average about three-fourths of a bale to the acre. Earl Henking has about 300 acres in cotton near Niland which he estimates will yield about three-fourths of a bale to the acre. Up to October 1, Mexican and other laborers had not returned to Imperial Valley, as they usually do, in numbers large enough to supply the demand for cotton pickers and many growers had to postpone their first picking. As a consequence cotton came in slowly.

Lee Terry manager of the Hartman gin in Calipatria, says: "From present indications the top crop on cotton in this district is the heaviest it has been since 1923 and I look for good prices to be maintained." L. T. Holmes paid 25 cents per pound for cotton in the Calipatria yards September 17. Large trucks with trailers have started to move the new crop of cotton to Los Angeles and the San Pedro Compress. The Coberly Cottonseed Oil Mill started September 7 and enough seed has been ginned to keep it operating day and night. About sixteen tons of cottonseed are run through this mill every twenty-four hours and the first carload of cottonseed oil for this season were shipped the last week in September. Five carloads of oil cake were shipped to Los Angeles and San Francisco before September 20. As soon as enough cottonseed is available the output of the oil mill will be increased about 50 per cent by new machinery.

THE ALFALFA CROP

Alfalfa is the second largest crop raised in the Calipatria district. Several thousand tons are baled every year and a large portion of it is piled up on the ranches awaiting a favorable fall and winter market. During the months of July and August a majority of alfalfa growers do not irrigate their fields; they are pastured or allowed to make a crop of seed. Several hundred acres of alfalfa were threshed for the seed this summer. Nearly all alfalfa fields in this district are renovated and reseeded, especially where there is a light stand, and thirty to sixty pounds of barley seed added. This insures more pasture and a much heavier hay crop the first cutting in the spring.

A large proportion of the 15,000 acres of alfalfa in this district is used for pasture most of the year. Several thousand head of beef and dairy cattle are fed on North End pastures throughout the year. From 15,000 to 20,000 sheep are usually fattened here in the winter. There will be a large increase in the number fed in this section this winter as the Vail Company expects to feed over 20,000 head and the Balfour-Guthrie Company will feed 10,000 more. In addition several thousand head of hogs are raised and fattened in the Calipatria district during the year for the Los Angeles and Coast markets. Many hundreds of turkeys are raised principally on alfalfa fields in the North End. For a short time before they are shipped to the Coast markets they are fed on milo maize. Turkeys from Imperial Valley usually top the Los Angeles market.

FRUIT AND VEGETABLES

The raising of a large quantity of early fruits and vegetables is playing an important part in the development of the North End district most of which was a desert until the Highline canal was put through twelve years ago. This end of the valley is now one of the earliest fruit and vegetable districts in the United States. Lying along the Highline Canal, north and east of Calipatria, is a section called the "Frostless Belt" and, while it is not immune from frosts there is less freezing weather there than in lower parts of the valley. Many small vineyards and grapefruit orchards are located here and hundreds of acres of early green winter peas and lettuce are grown here as well as tomatoes, squash and other winter vegetables.

The outlook for a heavy yield of grapefruit on orchards in this district is good. C. A. Willaford has seventy acres on one lateral canal. Five acres are in 5-year-old grapefruit trees. There are 110 trees to the acre and he expects a yield of from 500 to 600 boxes of first-grade fruit.

Last fall over 1600 acres of lettuce were grown in this end of the valley. From present indications it is expected that the lettuce acreage will be considerably increased this fall. The Robert Leahy Company of Shamrock, has leased the T. Edwin Gill half-section near Calipatria and about that much more five miles west of here for lettuce. The Ryan Fruit Company, Los Angeles, has about 400 acres of North End lands leased for vegetables and will plant a large acreage to lettuce. Wilkinson Brothers in conjunction with the San Diego Fruit and Produce Company, San Diego, will plant about eighty acres to lettuce, 320 acres to peas and over 100 acres to tomatoes. Last year there were about 700 acres of peas planted in this section and Wilkinson Brothers, the San Diego Fruit and Produce Company, and a few small growers shipped over forty carloads of peas to California and eastern markets. From present indications it is expected the acreage in peas in the Calipatria district will be increased to about 1200 this year. Express shipments of peas, squash, peppers and other winter vegetables were so heavy for a few weeks that the American Express Company set out a special car for some time to handle the business from Calipatria. Vegetable growers have been busy preparing and planting their fields and many were irrigated the latter part of September. From some of these early-planted fields lettuce and other vegetables will be harvested for the Christmas trade.

The Pistachio Tree as an Ornamental

By LOUIS S. BADOUR

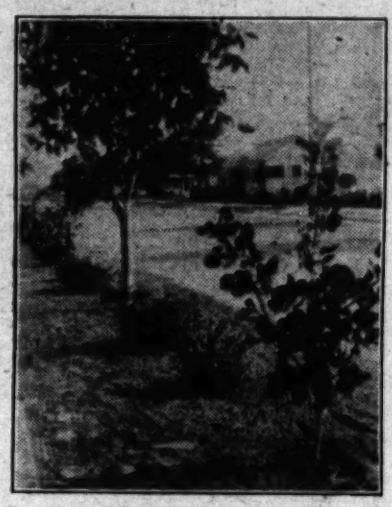
Lovers of handsome and useful trees are paying some attention to the pistachio, which is grown in many parts of California and other Southern and Southwestern States. Within the last few years the United States Government Plant Introduction Gardens have distributed about 25,000 of them and they are reported to be doing well in many localities.

The pistachio is of upright habit and light colored bark. The stem of the shoots when young is of a deep rose color. The leaves are oblong, glossy and one to two inches in diameter. At the base and along the branches the leaves are deep green, and at the tips a warm bronze. Normally the tree grows to a height of fifteen or twenty feet and begins to bear the third or fourth year. At ten years a tree should bear from 100 to 200 pounds of nuts under favorable conditions.

The pistachio nut consists of a single kernel enclosed in a thin shell, in turn enclosed in a soft epicarp, brilliantly colored red, blue and yellow. As the nuts are borne in clusters this adds a vivid effect to the appearance of the tree. If the tree is properly cared for the clusters sometimes weigh as much as five pounds. The kernel is light green in color and has a pronounced flavor. It is used in flavoring ice creams and confections.

In Syria, Asia Minor and the island of Sicily, where the trees are cultivated, the nuts are roasted and salted as almonds are here. The best varieties contain many nuts whose shells are self-cracking. The rest are soaked in water for about three hours and exposed to the sun when they open, and are salted. They are sold in the markets of Sicily, Syria and Spain and are popular with all classes.

The consumption in the United States is small. One reason is the price, for they retail at $1 to $1.50 a pound. Another reason may be the lack of proper preparation. After the nuts are open they should be washed and while still wet sprinkled with only enough salt to enter the cracks; then roasted.



Ornamental and Useful.

Pistachio tree (front) used as parking planting on place of Louis S. Badour, Glendale.

The tree is easily grown, as its natural climatic requirement is about the same as for the olive and fig. It has withstood a temperature of 14 to 15 degrees Fahrenheit for several nights in succession without injury. It does well in any good garden soil and requires little irrigation after it is established. The writer has seen it growing luxuriantly on Mount Lebanon in Syria and in the vicinity of Aleppo and Aintab, where it is never irrigated, there being abundant precipitation in winter. While requiring less water than other nut trees, it is not recommended for dry and arid regions.

There are seventeen species. Some of the trees produce the gum mastic resin used in high-class confections and utilized by Mohammedan ladies for chewing gum to perfume the breath and strengthen the gums.

On Mount Lebanon and also in Sicily a species known as Pistachia Terebinthus has grown wild for years. It was called Sha'shee or Butn by the natives of Mount Lebanon. The shoots and leaves were browsed by goats. One of the natives discovered that by grafting the cultivated scions of pistachio trees on these wild trees they could be made to bear crops of marketable nuts. Now those mountain tracts have become pistachio groves and produce thousands of pounds that bring their owners handsome yearly incomes.

No diseases or insect pests seem to molest this tree. At times the shells grow to normal size but contain no kernels. This is due to lack of pollination. The trees are dioecious—male and female flowers are borne on different trees. A male tree should be planted to every eight or ten female trees. In Sicily hand pollination is practiced.

Government investigators believe commercial culture of pistachio nuts is not warranted for a long time to come, as American consumers are not widely acquainted with it. They think that for the present it is best grown as an ornamental for street and landscape plantings.

One male and three female trees of the Aleppo, Bronte and Trabonella varieties are growing in the parking of the writer's residence at 468 West Lexington street, Glendale, where they are planted among Damascus myrtle. They are evergreen and later are expected to produce a profitable crop of nuts.

Windbreak Campaign Is Showing Results

SANTA ANA.—Results of the educational campaign for better orchard protection by means of windbreaks, sponsored during the past three years by the agricultural extension service, co-operating with the Orange county farm bureau and citrus associations, can be plainly seen from the highways of Orange county, according to Harold Wahlberg, Orange county farm adviser.

"The vigorous growth of the new plantings is beginning to show prominently on a number of highways, the most popular combination of plantings being the eucalyptus and Monterey cypress," said he. "It is difficult to say just how many windbreaks have been planted. The extension service estimates that if all the new plantings put out during the past two years were placed in a straight line, end for end, they would total twelve to fifteen miles in length.

"It is interesting to note the number of converts to the planting of windbreaks. In several localities, new windbreaks may be seen coming up between the old stumps that mark the location of former plantings. In other places, whole rows of orange or lemon trees have been removed in order to make room for the windbreak protection. Where the windbreak was considered a nuisance by growers a short while ago, today they are being fostered as a necessary adjunct to the protection of the citrus industry in exposed sections. Proper methods of windbreak culture and management have been studied by the growers of Orange county through numerous field meetings and tours conducted by the agricultural extension service. Today the growers realize that the windbreaks are assets to their orchards rather than liabilities if they are given reasonable care and attention."

New Officers Elected

T. H. Lambert of El Monte was elected president of the Los Angeles County Farm Bureau for the coming year at the annual meeting of that organization in Los Angeles, October 22. He succeeds W. A. Johnstone, of San Dimas, who at the same meeting was chosen chairman of the citrus growers department of the bureau. W. S. Rosecrans, of Gardena was re-elected to the position of regional, director to represent Los Angeles, Ventura, Santa Barbara and Inyo counties in the State Farm Bureau Federation. Frank Pellissier, Whittier, was elected vice-president, and Ralph McNees, Whittier, treasurer. Roy K. Cole, Whittier, will serve as general secretary, and John C. Hayes, Burbank, as organization secretary. Directors at large for the coming year will be W. A. Neibel, Downey; Dr. George P. Clements, Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce; E. G. Hotchkiss, Covina; S. O. Houghton, Van Nuys; Harvey Bissell, La Crescenta; Miss Lydia Weld, Del Sur; E. A. Merritt, Lancaster; J. C. Hayes, Burbank; S. Erle Goodall, Owensmouth; J. A. Bell, San Gabriel.

World's Largest Vineyard

Picking grapes in the world's largest solid planting of grapes, the Italian Vineyard Company's 5,000-acre tract at Guasti. Thousands of tons of juice grapes are as usual being crushed for wine this season at the company's huge winery, but there is no occasion for an anticipatory smacking of lips—there is "not a drop to drink." The daily carload shipments of table grapes have also been enormous. Before Prohibition, as high as 500 tons of grapes were crushed daily at Guasti.

The owners of the great San Bernardino County vineyard use a train of dump cars drawn by a miniature locomotive to haul their grapes to the crusher and loading station. Here pickers are shown loading grapes on the train.

A close-up of the locomotive and train pulling into the "yards" at the winery.

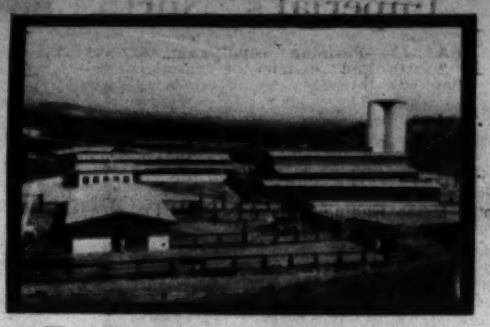
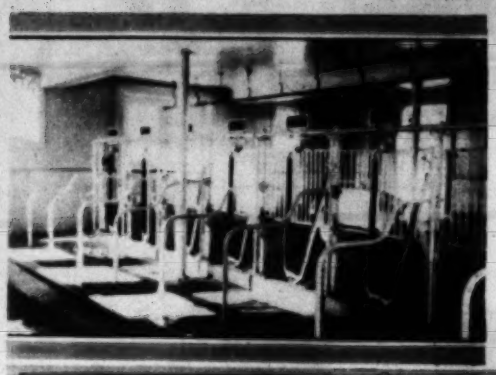
Milk "Comes Clean" to the Consumers of Los Angeles

(Illustrating article on page 3 of this issue)

One of the sources of Los Angeles milk—a big modern sanitary dairy in Ventura county.

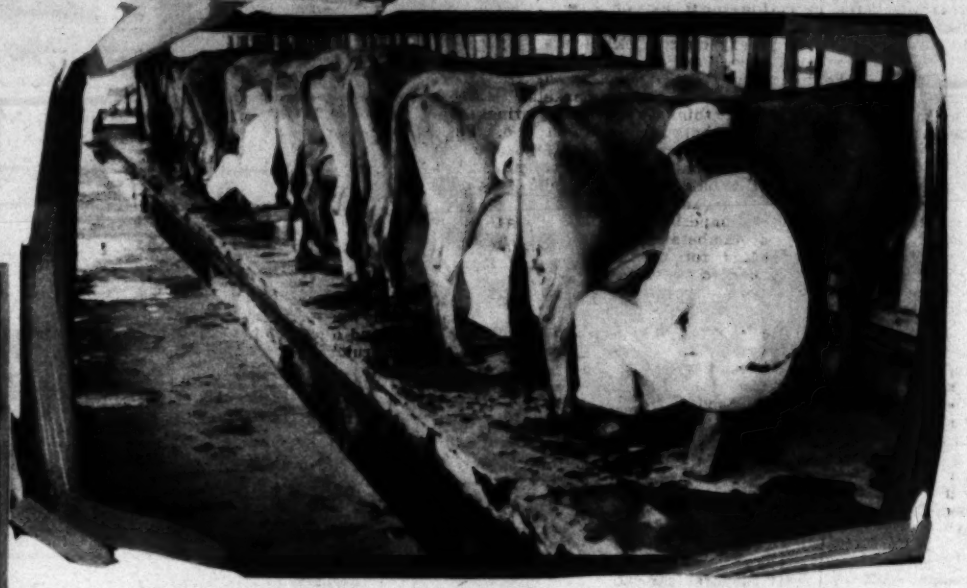


The calves are kept in separate barns at a distance from the milk houses in this great Los Angeles county dairy.



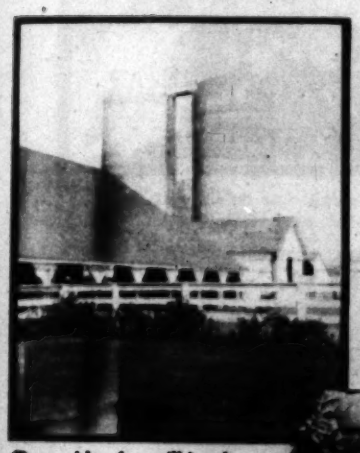
Whitewash and concrete are agencies of cleanliness in this Tulare county dairy.

Metal stanchions and concrete floors and gutters are easily kept sanitary.



In the modern dairy barn the milkers are clad in white and are scrupulously clean.

These cows stand in stanchions in cool barns, where there is a minimum of dust and flies.



Open sides for milking barns are possible in the Southland, and admit those two great germicides, fresh air and sunshine.

The bossies are milked by machinery in many dairies—an operation that avoids dirt and makes sanitation easier.

A horrible example—a group of filthy dairies. Thank heaven, not in Southern California!

No Los Angeles consumer gets milk from these dirty cows. It is to prevent such conditions that city inspection is maintained.
